PRESENTATION

Two years after the biggest enlargement in the history of European integration and before the accession of Bulgaria and Romania planned for 1 January of 2007 or 2008, enlargement is a crucial issue on the European agenda.

Enlargement is one of the most powerful policy tools that the European Union has to extend peace, stability and prosperity. The pull of the EU has helped to transform Central and Eastern Europe into modern, well-functioning democracies with market economies. More recently, it has inspired far-reaching reforms in Turkey, Croatia and the other Western Balkan countries.

The political benefits of EU enlargement, such as the extension of peace, stability, prosperity, democracy, human rights and the rule of law across Europe, seem to be widely recognized. On the other hand, one might ask whether citizens are really aware of the enlargement process and its consequences, and whether there is scepticism in Europe's public opinion about these benefits and the less emphasized economic and social consequences of enlargement.

The European Commission, Directorate-General Enlargement, regularly reviews the attitudes and experiences of the EU population relating to the enlargement of the European Union within Standard Eurobarometer surveys.

The Directorate-General Enlargement wished to commission a poll on EU citizens' perceptions of their knowledge about enlargement and their perception of the advantages and disadvantages of the enlargement of the European Union. Interviews were conducted face-to-face in people's homes, in their national language, between March 27 and May 01, 2006. The countries surveyed include the twenty-five Member States of the European Union, the two acceding countries (Bulgaria and Romania), the two negotiating candidate countries (Croatia and Turkey) as well as the Turkish Cypriot Community (TCC). The methodology used is that of the Standard Eurobarometer polls, managed by the Directorate-General Communication (unit "Opinion polls and Media Monitoring"). In the annex, a technical note details the interview techniques used by the institutes of the TNS Opinion & Social network, as well as levels of confidence.

The underlying objective of this analysis is to assess citizens' level and type of information, as well as their attitude towards the principal objectives, and their perception of the advantages and disadvantages of EU enlargement. Finally, we will explore the citizens' view of possible future EU enlargement to the Western Balkan countries and Turkey.

For each theme addressed, our analysis¹ looks at the:

- European Union as a whole;
- Individual countries;
- Socio-demographic variables;

Other variables which we systematically cross-tabulated with the results for each question include: being for or against enlargement (results for QA30.4²) and self-perceived knowledge of enlargement (results for QD1).

¹ In some cases, due to the rounding of figures, displayed sums can show a difference of one point with the sum of the individual cells. Also, note that the total percentages shown in the tables of this report may exceed 100% where the respondent is allowed to give several answers to a particular question.

Before going into further detail, it is appropriate to provide a picture of EU citizens' current attitude towards the enlargement of the European Union in general.

Questionnaire source: QA30.4³

A relative majority of the EU population (45%) is basically in favour of EU enlargement. Nevertheless they are quite divided on this issue, as a significant number of respondents (42%) oppose it.

In all the 10 new member states at least one out of two citizens support further enlargement of the Union. In Poland (72%) and in Slovenia (73%) this ratio of support represents almost three quarters of their population.

The two acceding states Bulgaria (62%) and Romania (69%) along with the candidate country, Croatia (64%) are also vigorously for enlargement. However, only a relative majority of Turks (45%) backs this process in general. The number of opponents represents 29% of the Turkish population; in addition there is a high rate (25%) of interviewees who had no opinion on this matter.

Of the EU15 the majority of Greek (56%), Spanish (55%) and Danish (51%) respondents claimed to be in favour of enlargement.

Further, in Sweden (49%), Italy (48%), Portugal (47%), Ireland (45%) and the UK (44%) a relative majority of citizens supports enlargement.

German (66%), Luxembourgish (65%), French (62%), Austrian (61%) and Finnish (60%) interviewees disapprove of EU enlargement in particular.

Socio-demographic variables tell us that men (47%) are slightly more in favour of enlargement than women (43%). Age and education seem to markedly affect the attitude of Europeans surveyed towards enlargement; the younger (56% of interviewees aged 15-24 compared to 35% of persons 55 years or older) and the better educated (51% of those who left full-time education at the age of 20 or later, and 59% of whom are still studying compared to 35% of those who left at age 15) a respondent is, the more he/she supports enlargement. Added to which political views also influence this issue a little; people on the left (50%) tend to endorse the accession of future member states more than people with right-wing views (42%).

As the information content provided for citizens can sometimes influence how they form their opinions on a given topic, it is interesting to explore their perceptions regarding their level of knowledge (QD1), and the content of this knowledge, on the enlargement of the European Union, as well as to analyse how this knowledge impacts their feelings towards enlargement.

³ QA30.4 What is your opinion on each of the following statements? Please tell me for each statement, whether you are for it or against it.

4. Further enlargement of the European Union to include other countries in future years

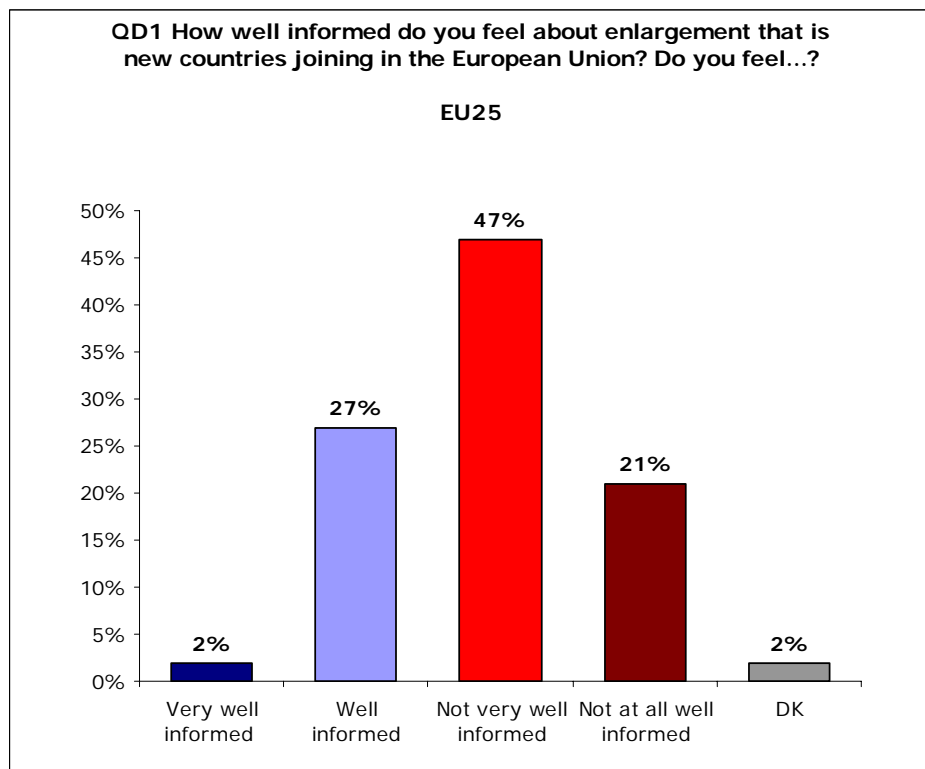

1. General knowledge of EU enlargement

1.1. Subjective knowledge of European Union citizens about enlargement

- Citizens of the EU25 do not feel they are well informed about EU enlargement -

Questionnaire source: QD1⁴

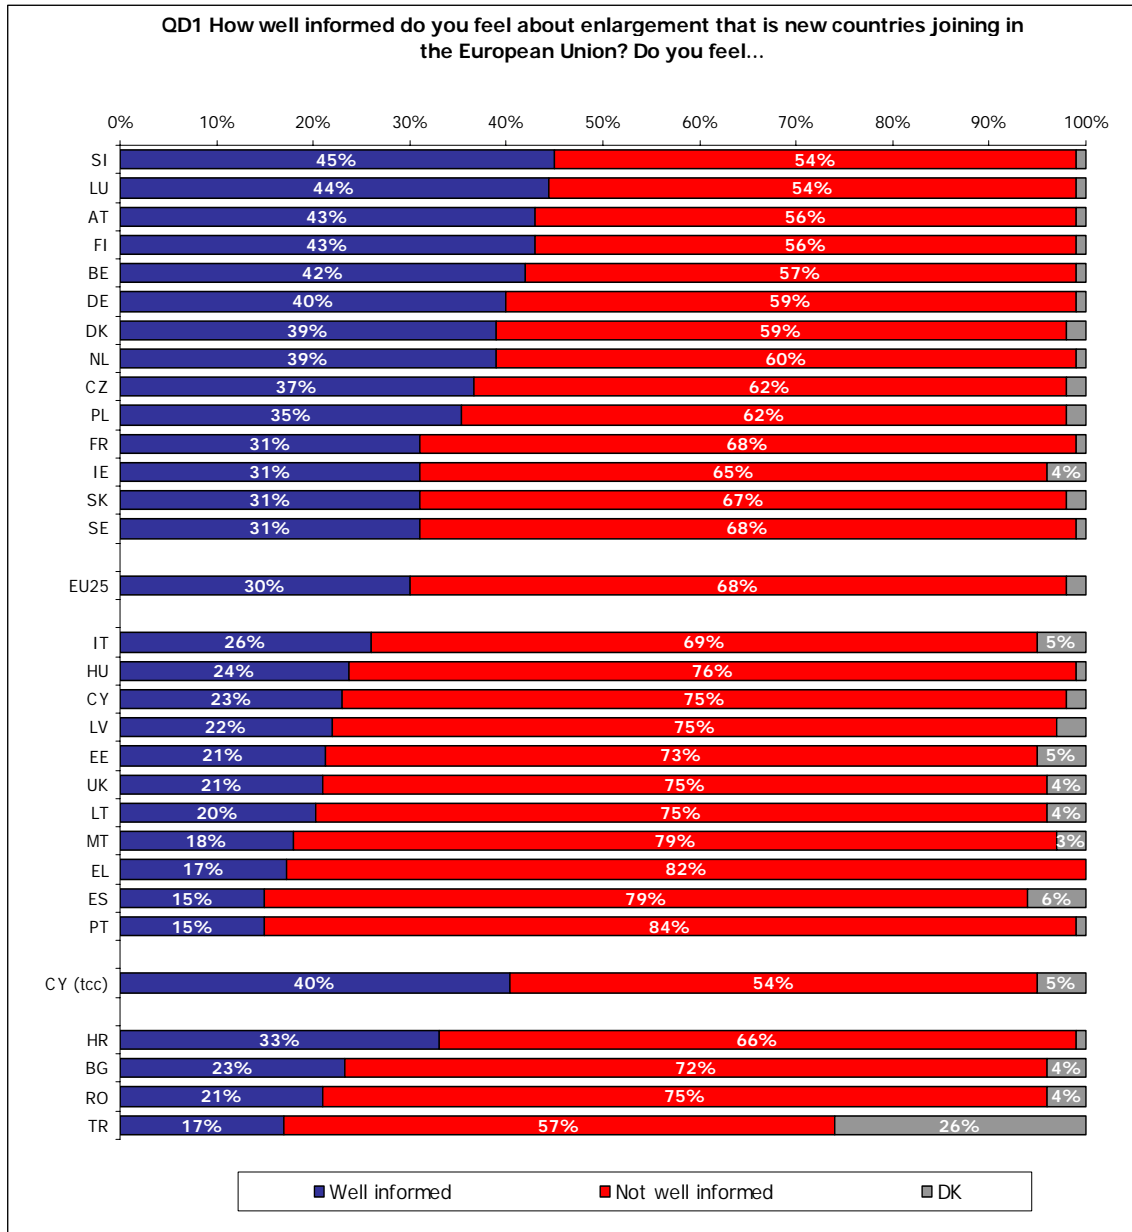

Over two thirds (68%) of the EU population do not feel they are well informed about enlargement issues. Over a quarter (29%), however feel the opposite.

At the country level Slovenians (45%), Luxembourgers (44%), Austrians (43%), Finns (43%) and Belgians (42%) seem to be the best informed concerning EU enlargement.

⁴ QD1 How well informed do you feel about enlargement that is new countries joining in the European Union? Do you feel...?

On the contrary, citizens of southern European countries, Portugal (15%), Spain (15%), Turkey (17%), Greece (17%) and Malta (18%) appear to feel less informed about this topic in general.

When comparing this year’s results to the ones looked at two months before the 2004 enlargement⁵, slightly different trends can be observed in regard to the old 15 member states and the 10 new ones:

In the EU15, the level of self-perceived knowledge has remained at 29% on average. All together, in 10 out of the 15 member states the level of subjective knowledge has decreased over the last two years. In Luxembourg, the same proportion of respondents (44%) feel well-informed now as then, in France (31%, +4 points) and in Italy (26%, +2 points) a solid; while, in Germany (40%, +7 points) and in Belgium (42%, +9 points) a larger increase has been measured. However, in Finland (43%, -8 points), Spain (15%, -10 points) and in Greece (17%, -16 points) figures have decreased even more spectacularly.

On the other hand, probably due to an intensive information campaign right before the 2004 accession in the ten new member states, the level of subjective knowledge in these countries – apart from the Czech Republic (an increase of 6 percentage points) – was higher in the first half of 2004 than at the present time. This is also reflected in the average results of the 10 new member states: compared to 2004 (38%), today only one third (33%) of the new member states' citizens claim to be well-informed about EU enlargement issues.

Occupation and educational levels have the most important influence on how well respondents feel informed about enlargement. Relatively high proportions of managers (47%) and of the highly educated (44%) feel they are well informed about enlargement. It can be also observed that men (36%) feel slightly better informed than women (24%). On the other hand, house persons (76%) and those who stopped education at the age of 15 (76%) notably declared they did not feel well informed about new countries joining the EU.

Questionnaire source: QA30.4 and QD1⁶

There is a certain correlation between the self-perception of being well informed and supporting enlargement in general.

Firstly, at the EU level, people who are in favour of the enlargement of the European Union tend to consider themselves slightly better informed about EU enlargement issues (35%) than persons who oppose it (29%).

At the country level this tendency can be observed in most countries surveyed, especially in Austria, Luxembourg and Belgium: 64% of Austrians, 59% of Luxembourgers, and 52% of Belgians are in favour of enlargement and claim to be well informed; on the contrary 36% of Austrians, 40% of Luxembourgers, and 35% of Belgians are against enlargement and feel well informed.

In contrast to the general picture in five current member states of the EU (the Netherlands 41%, Finland 46%, Latvia 25%, Lithuania 24% and Hungary 28%) and in the two acceding countries (Bulgaria 34% and Romania 33%) a reverse trend can be observed; namely respondents who are against enlargement seem to be slightly better informed. On the other hand, 37% of Dutch, 43% of Finns, 23%

⁶ Crossed question:

QA30.4 What is your opinion on each of the following statements? Please tell me for each statement, whether you are for it or against it.

4. Further enlargement of the European Union to include other countries in future years

QD1 How well informed do you feel about enlargement that is new countries joining in the European Union? Do you feel...?

of Latvians, 22% of Lithuanians and 27% of Hungarians as well as 29% of Bulgarians and 26% of Romanians who are in favour of enlargement feel well informed.

Secondly, regarding this correlation the other way around; the majority (53%) of EU citizens who claimed to feel well informed about enlargement are – when compared to the general average of support (45%) - in favour of this process; meanwhile, 41% oppose it.

EU25	FOR	AGAINST	DK
Total	45%	42%	13%
Well informed	53%	41%	6%
Not well informed	41%	43%	15%

Similarly to this trend, in all countries polled – with the exception of Finland and the Netherlands - well informed people claimed to be in favour of enlargement more often than not well informed respondents.

However, of those Finns (62%), Germans (60%), Luxembourgers (58%), French (56%), Dutch (53%) and Austrians (51%) who feel well informed of enlargement, the majority are against it.

This can be explained in two ways: either people who support enlargement are more interested in this topic and obtain more information about it, than opponents; or people who know more about this process are also more aware of its advantages, and so support it.

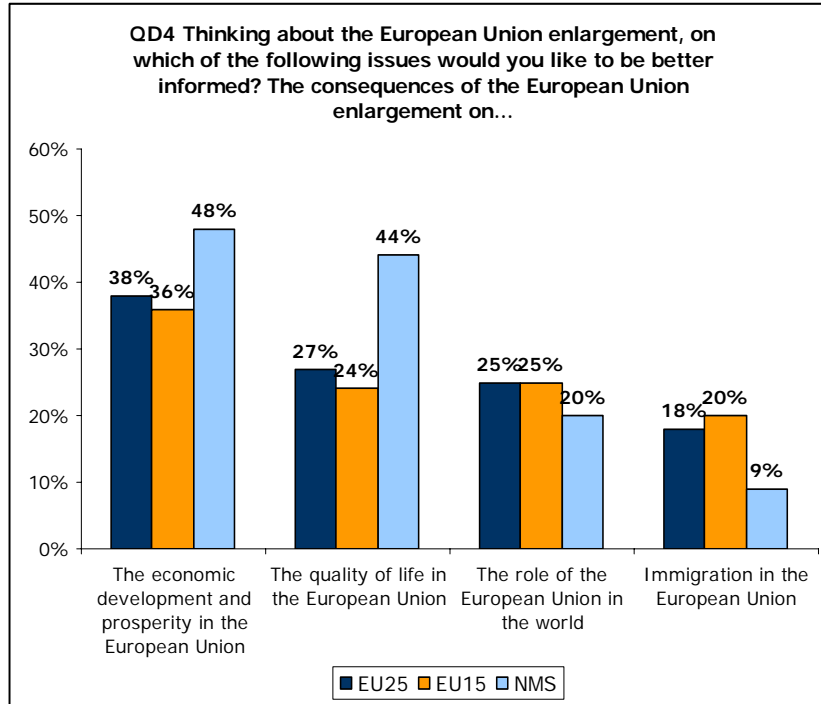

Questionnaire source: QD4⁷

As they feel globally not very well informed, many EU citizens would like to learn more about the following topics in conjunction with enlargement: “economic development and prosperity” (38%), “quality of life” (27%), “peace and stability” (26%) in the Union, as well as “the EU’s role in the world” (25%).

⁷ QD4 Thinking about the European Union enlargement, on which of the following issues would you like to be better informed? The consequences of the European Union enlargement on...

There is also a significant interest in “the democratic functioning of the EU (23%) and in “security and criminal activities in the Union” (22%) in connection with enlargement.

There is a noticeable difference between the topics that old and new member states’ citizens want to be informed about: people from the new member states as well as from the two acceding countries are more interested in the economic situation (48% in both) and the quality of life in the EU (new member states - 44% and acceding countries - 46%) than people from the old 15 (36% for the economic situation and 24% for the quality of life). This is understandable given the discrepancies between average standards of living.

Citizens in the old 15 member states express their interests from a bit more of a global point of view; 25% would like to learn more about the EU’s role in the world while for the new member states this is 20%.

Although generally immigration is not a major concern at the EU25 level (18%), there is a visible difference between the results of the EU15 compared to the ten new member states: Immigration in the EU seems to worry 20% of the EU15 population, particularly Danes (28%) and British (25%). In contrast, since immigration affects the new member states more rarely, only 9% of their citizens are interested in this question.

With respect to the country results, it is worth mentioning that Luxembourgers are 20 percentage points more interested in issues of “peace and stability” (46%) and “security and criminal activities” (42%) in the Union than the average EU citizen (26% and 22% respectively). “The democratic functioning of the EU” is closer to Swedish (44%), Danish (43%) and Dutch (35%) hearts than to an average European’s heart (23%).

It is also striking that 35% of Turks have no opinion on this question, which suggests that they are not interested in learning more about the enlargement process of the European Union in general.

Looking at the differences by socio-demographic categories, we can see that the highly educated (47%) and managers (51%) would like to be better informed about the consequences of enlargement on economic development and prosperity, than those who finished their education at the age of 15 (29%) and than house persons (28%).

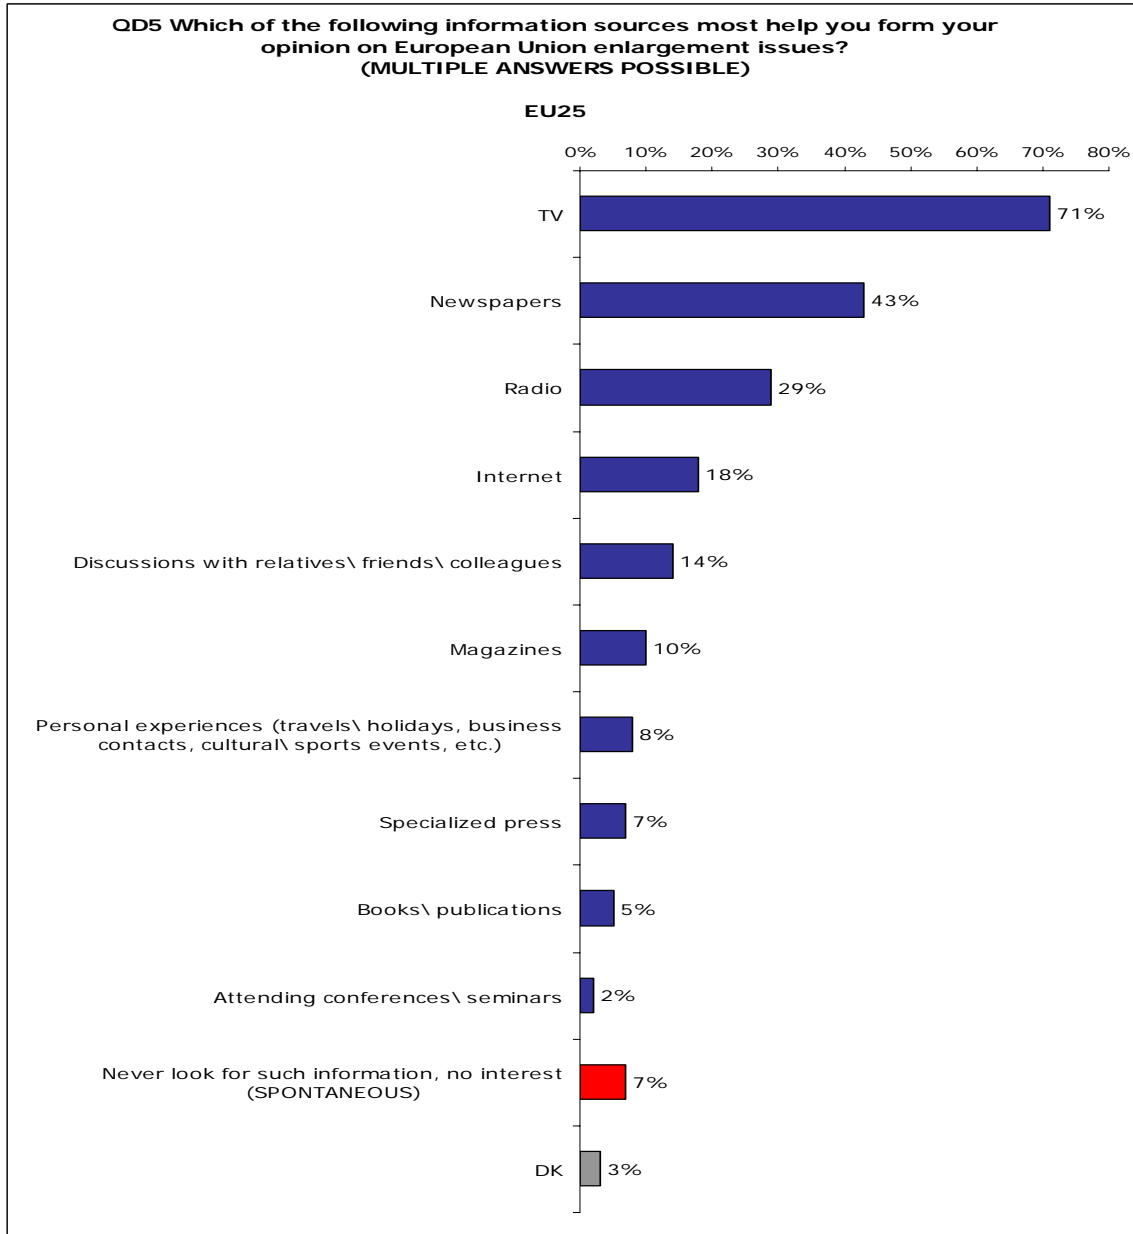

Respondents who are opposed to the idea of enlargement expressed more often that they would like to be better informed of security and criminal matters in the EU than those who are in favour of it (27% in comparison to 21% noted of enlargement optimists) and about immigration in the EU (25% in comparison to 14%).

1.2. Source of information for EU enlargement

- Television and national governments have the greatest opportunity to determine information on EU enlargement-

Questionnaire source: QD5⁸

Across the Union most citizens gain information on enlargement issues via television (71%). On the second and third place come newspapers (43%) and radio (29%), followed by the internet (18%).

⁸ QD5 Which of the following information sources most help you form your opinion on European Union enlargement issues?

There are slight differences between the most relied on information sources of the old 15 and the 10 new member states: television (78%), radio (37%) and the internet (21%) are more popular forms of acquiring information on EU enlargement in the new member states, compared to the EU15 (TV 70%, radio 27% and internet 17%). On the other hand, reading newspapers assists EU15 citizens more (45%) than new member states' citizens (34%) in forming opinions on this issue.

For detailed country results please see table below. It is no surprise that the Dutch (35%) use the web to catch up on enlargement most, since the Netherlands has the highest rate of internet connections at home (85%) in Europe.⁹

No considerable differences can be observed within socio-demographic categories.

We can however stress that respondents who declared they are not well informed on enlargement are interested in such issues, as only 10% of this group declared that they never seek out such information.

Questionnaire source: QD6¹⁰

59% of the EU population think it should be mainly national governments that inform them of EU enlargement issues. In second and third place comes the role of news broadcasters (38%) and the European Parliament (24%) in connection with this responsibility. This signalizes that EU citizens attach a greater responsibility to national governments on EU issues than to the European Parliament.

¹⁰ QD6 And in your opinion, who should have the main responsibility to inform you about the enlargement of the European Union?

It is interesting to note, that a higher proportion of respondents from the old 15 member states expressed a preference for information from their national governments (60%) and the European Parliament (25%), than interviewees from the new member states (51% national governments and 18% European Parliament). By contrast, new member states' citizens emphasised the importance of the media (51%) in this more often, than those of the old member states (36%).

Analysing the results country by country, we can observe that national governments are expected to provide information about EU enlargement especially in Malta (83%), Portugal (79%), Cyprus (76%), the Netherlands (75%) and Greece (72%).

At least half of the population of the Czech Republic (61%), Poland (54%), Latvia (52%), Romania (52%), Lithuania (50%) and Belgium (50%) would expect news broadcasters to inform them of enlargement. On the other hand in Spain only 15% would expect the media to meet such requirements. However 22% of Spanish respondents were unable to form an opinion on this topic, which could be explained by a lack of interest of EU matters in general.

A significant number of the polled Danes preferred the European Parliament (41%) and national parliaments (40%) to be in charge of providing information on EU enlargement.

Regarding acceding countries, it is worth mentioning that 30% of Bulgarians think it is the national parliaments who should have the main responsibility of informing them of the enlargement of the European Union, while 29% of Romanians consider it is local authorities.

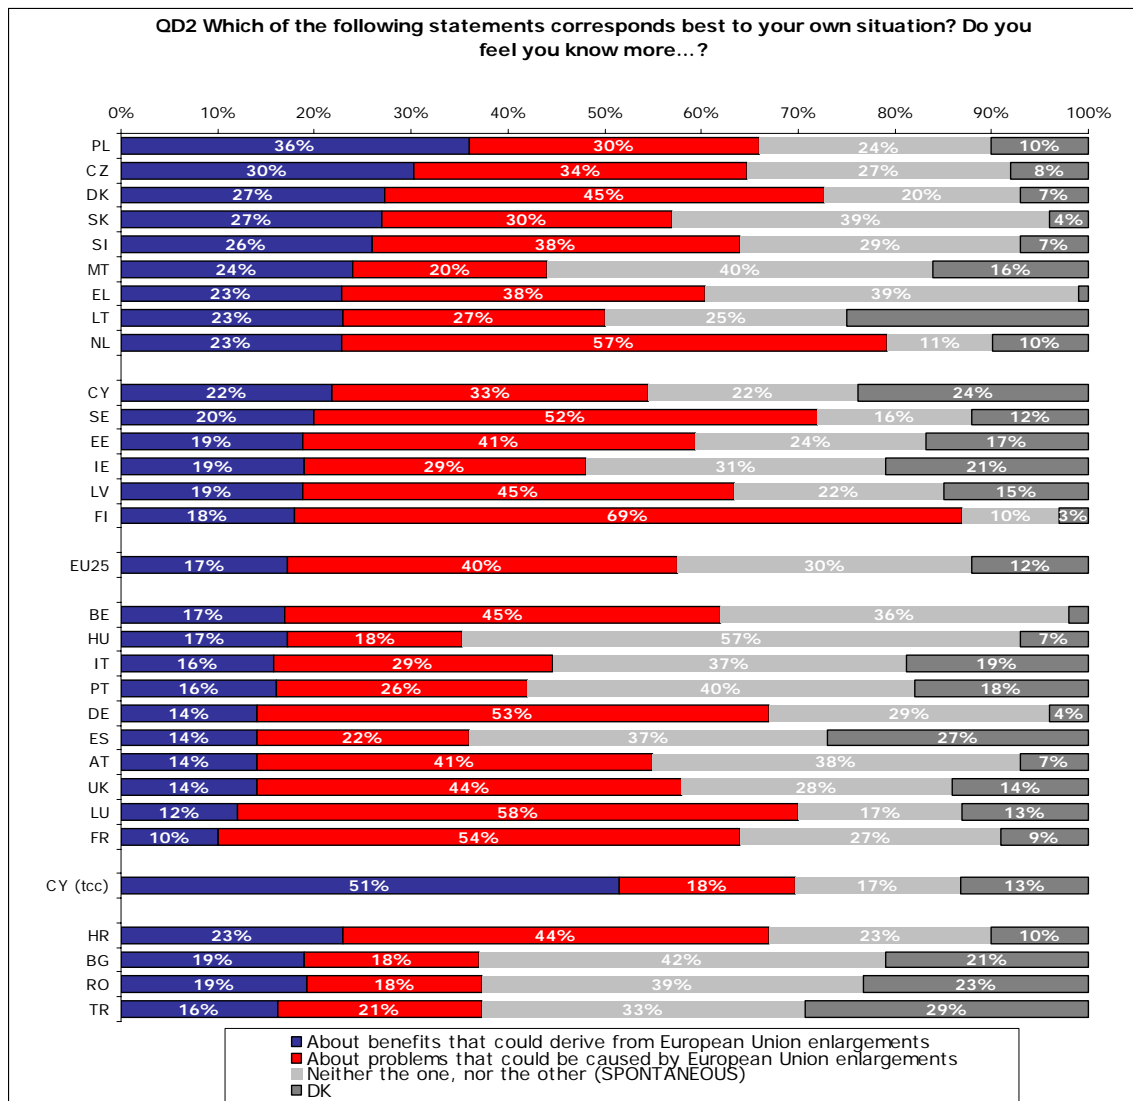

In socio-demographic terms it can be observed that people with higher education and managers wish to receive information on the enlargement from the European Parliament (34% and 36% respectively) and from the European Commission (20% for both categories) more than the other groups do, this is probably related to their level of knowledge of European institutions in general.

1.3. Content of information provided to citizens about EU enlargement

There is a certain correlation between the knowledge citizens have of the enlargement of the European Union, and the information they have been provided with on this issue. In this chapter, we will explore citizens' knowledge of EU enlargement, which enables us to presume the kind of information that has or has not been provided to them.

- Europe-wide lack of knowledge of the benefits of EU enlargement -

Questionnaire source: QD2¹¹

¹¹ QD2 Which of the following statements corresponds best to your own situation? Do you feel you know more...?

A relative majority of people living in the European Union (40%) know more about the problems that could arise in connection with EU enlargement, than about the benefits (17%); meanwhile 30% have either equal knowledge about the positive and negative consequences of enlargement or no knowledge respectively on this topic.¹² A further 12% responded with a 'don't know' to this question.

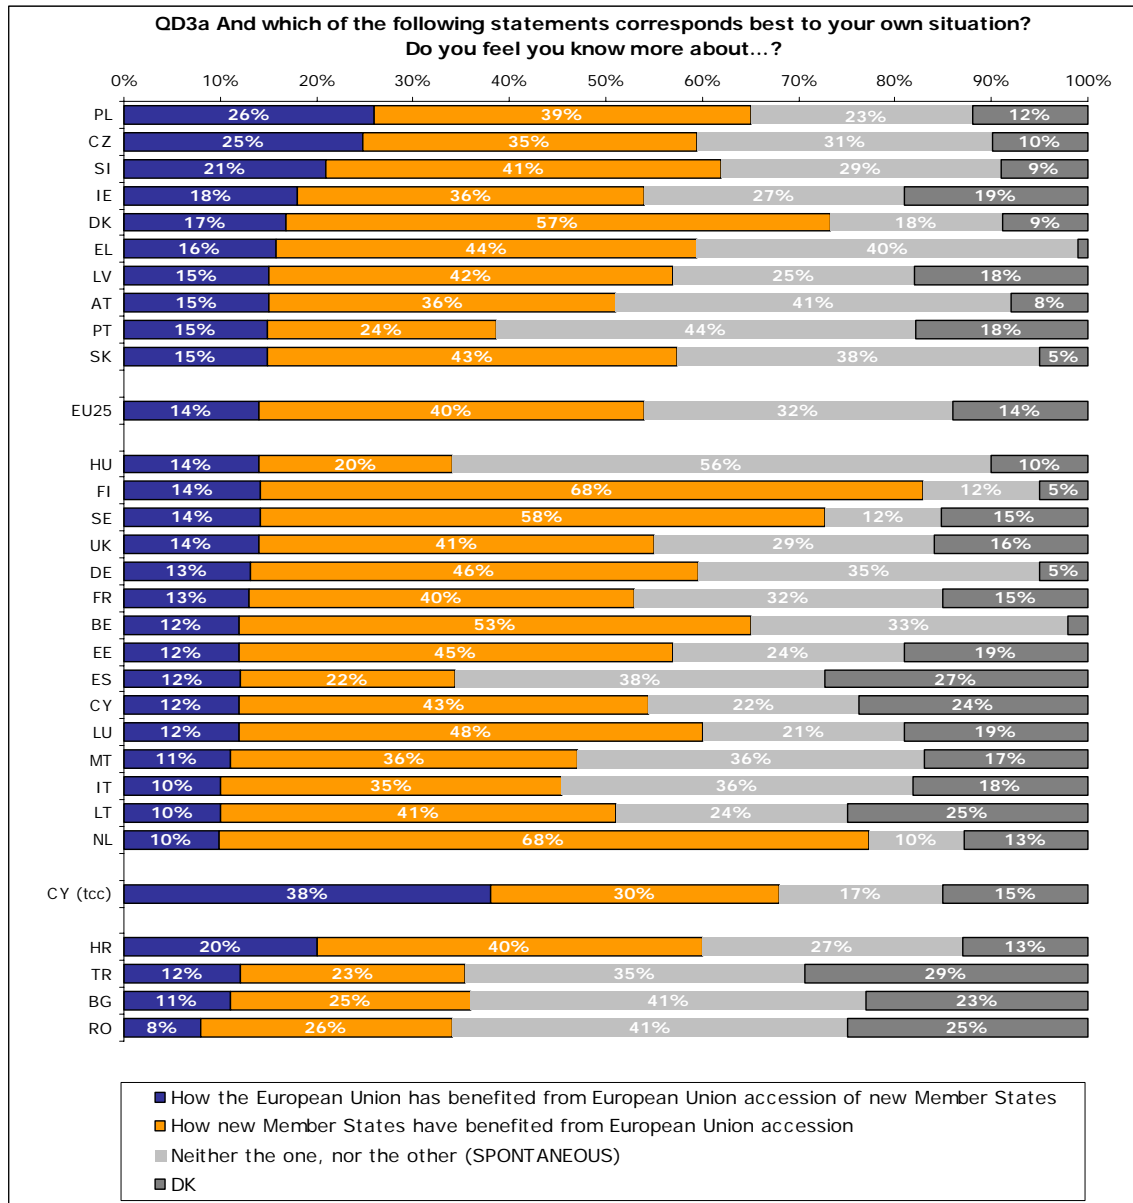

Inhabitants of the new member states (30%) know more about the benefits of EU enlargement than EU15 citizens, on average (15%), whereas more old member states' citizens (43%) claim to be aware of the problems, than "new comers" (30%) do.

With the exception of the Turkish Cypriot Community, Poland, Malta, Bulgaria and Romania, Europeans in all the other countries surveyed know more about the problems linked to the enlargement of the European Union, than of the benefits. In Finland (69%), Luxembourg (58%), the Netherlands (57%), France (54%), Germany (53%) and Sweden (52%) it is the majority of respondents, who feel they are better informed of the problems that could arise from EU enlargement.

As we might have expected, respondents who are against enlargement, said more frequently than enlargement "optimists", that they know more of the problems (54% when compared to 34% of enlargement "optimists"). At the same time an explanation for this can also be that they oppose enlargement because they know the problems better.

¹² Spontaneous answer; which means respondents were not in the position to choose one of the answers given at the questionnaire.

Questionnaire source: QD3a¹³

This question deals only with the benefits of enlargement, which it explores separately for both the EU as a whole, and for the new member states. Though the question is phrased in a general way it can be assumed that most interviewees might have thought of the latest and largest enlargement of the European Union, when answering this question.

¹³ QD3a And which of the following statements corresponds best to your own situation? Do you feel you know more about...?

A relative majority of the EU25 population (40%) feel they know more about how new member states have profited from their accession. 14% consider they know more about the EU's benefits in this issue. Meanwhile 32% have either the same or no knowledge on this matter.¹⁴

More respondents from the EU15 (41%) know about how new member states have benefited from their accession than people from the 10 new member states (36%). On the other hand citizens of countries which joined the Union in 2004 (22%) claim to know more about the EU's benefits concerning their accession than EU15 interviewees (13%).

In a country by country analysis we can observe that only Turkish Cypriots feel they know more about how the EU has benefited from the accession of new countries (38%) than the other way around (30%).

Citizens of Nordic countries (Finland 68%, Sweden 58% and Denmark 57%) as well as the Benelux states (the Netherlands 68%, Belgium 53% and Luxembourg 48%) claim to know most about new member states' advantages.

Socio-demographic trends correspond to the ones observed for question QD1 in relation to the self-perception of knowledge of enlargement: Men, highly educated respondents and managers feel to know more about the benefits both for new member states and for the EU as a whole. On the other hand, house persons and those who stopped education at the age of 15 claim to know less about both aspects than other socio-demographic groups.

Questionnaire source: QD3b¹⁵

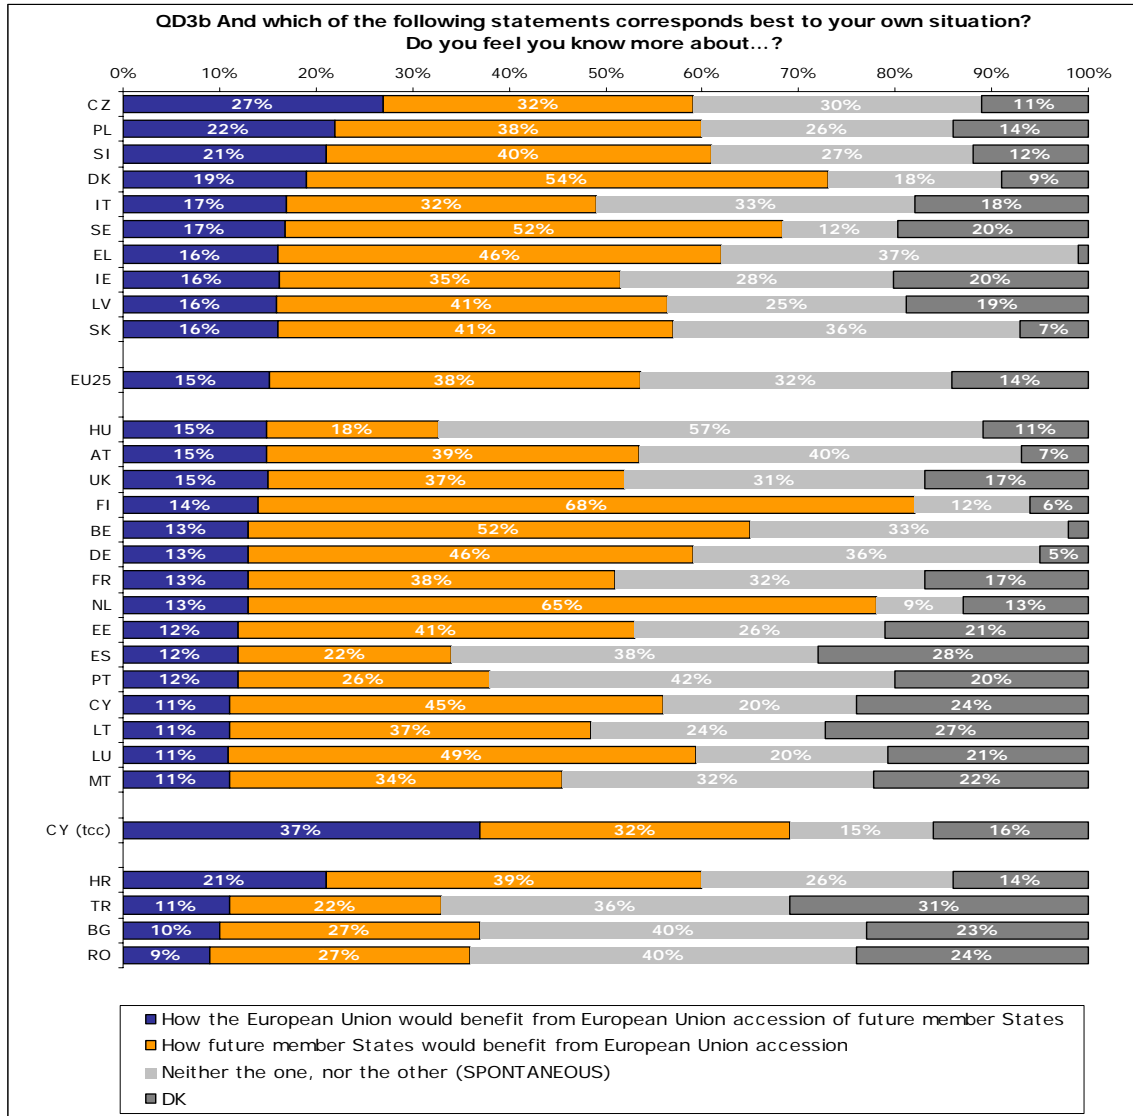

A relative majority of EU25 citizens (38%) feel they know more about how future member states would profit from their membership in the EU. 15% think they know more about how the Union would benefit from future accessions. Meanwhile 32% have either the same or no knowledge on this issue.

In all countries except for the Turkish Cypriot Community, citizens feel they know more about how future member states would benefit from their accession, than about the benefits of the EU in this context.

Both at the EU and the country level as well as in socio-demographic terms, the same trends can be observed as for the previous question.

¹⁴ Spontaneous answer; which means respondents were not in the position to choose one of the answers given at the questionnaire.

¹⁵ QD3b And which of the following statements corresponds best to your own situation? Do you feel you know more about...?

To sum up, Europeans surveyed are generally not well informed of enlargement. Most of this not really established knowledge is linked to problems which may arise from enlargement. An average EU citizen also has the feeling to know more about how new member states benefit from accession than how the EU does.

Furthermore we found that citizens, who feel well informed, are more in favour of enlargement than ones who do not feel well informed, probably because they are more interested in enlargement and are also more aware of the general benefits of this process. Those who feel less informed seem to know much more about problems caused by enlargement than benefits derived from this process, therefore they feel more insecure.

Looking at the numbers, people who feel well informed know also more about the problems (49%) than about the benefits (32%) linked to EU enlargement, however this difference is less important, than it is the case of interviewees who feel to be not well informed (knowledge of problems: 38%, knowledge of benefits: 12%).

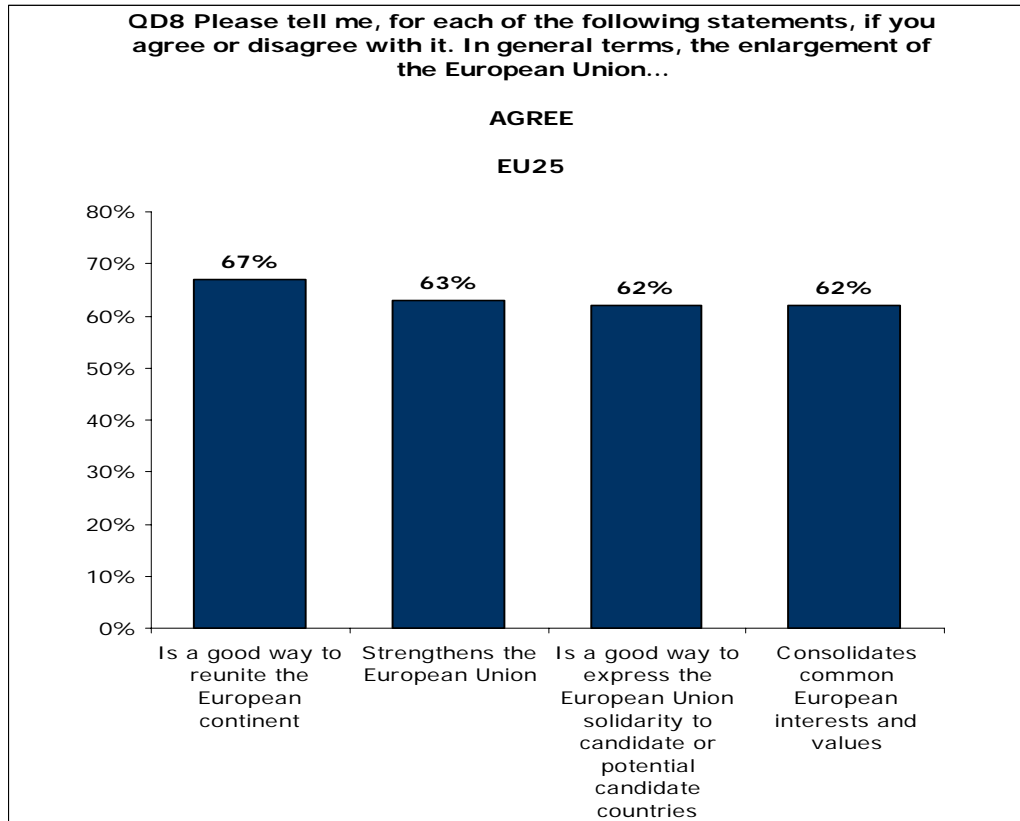

2. Perceived advantages and disadvantages of EU enlargement

2.1. General perceptions of EU enlargement

- Across Europe there is great support for the general arguments for the enlargement of the European Union-

Questionnaire source: QD8¹⁶

Roughly two thirds of people living in the EU agree with the universal ideas that inspire the enlargement of the European Union in general.

¹⁶ QD8 Please tell me, for each of the following statements, if you agree or disagree with it. In general terms, the enlargement of the European Union...

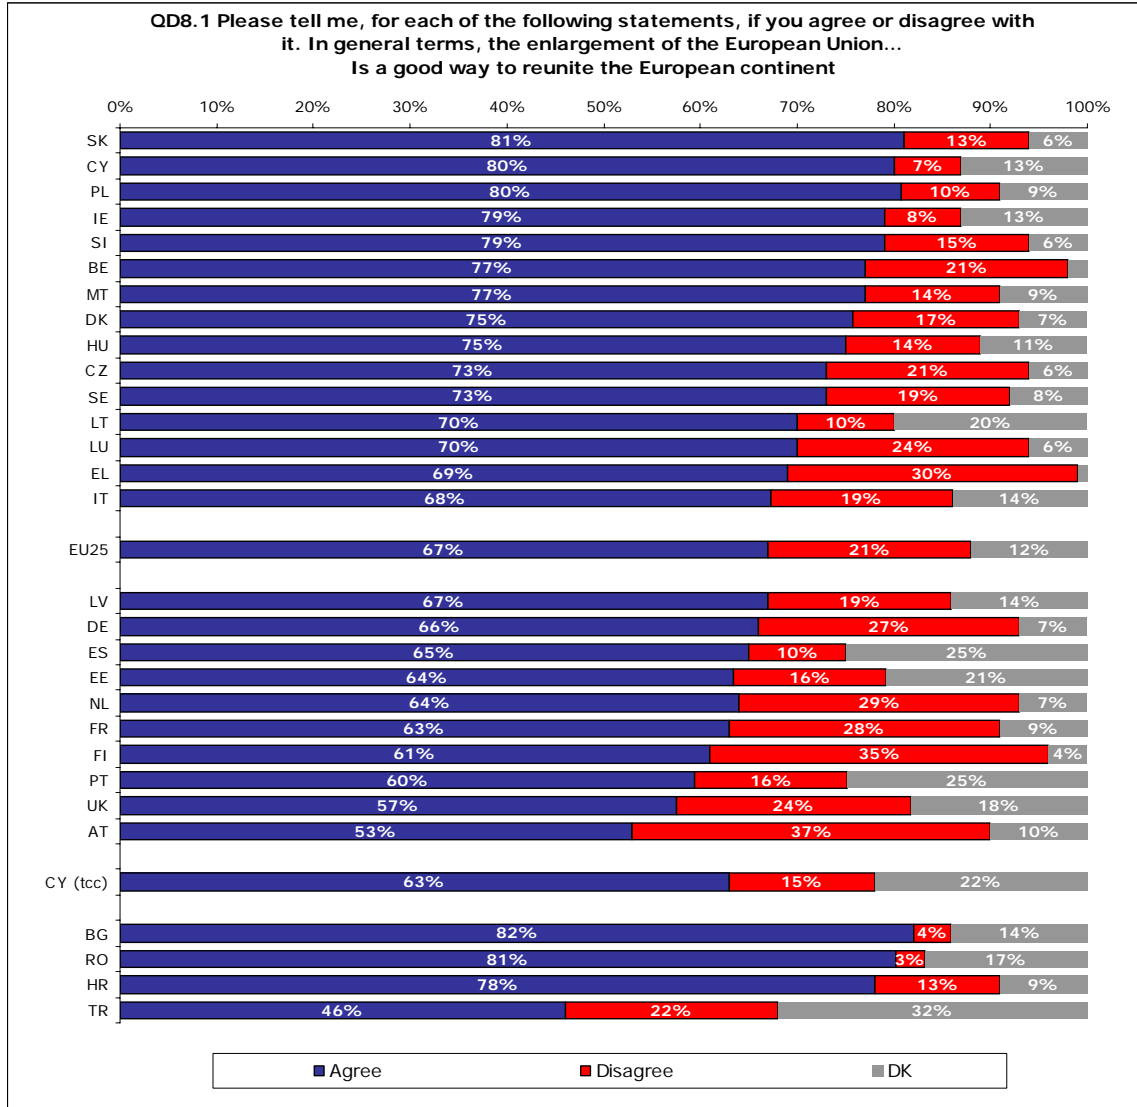

1. Is a good way to reunite the European continent.
2. Strengthens the European Union.
3. Is a good way to express the European Union solidarity to candidate or potential candidate countries.
4. Consolidates common European interests and values.

As a general trend it can be observed, that acceding countries (Bulgaria and Romania) along with Croatia, as well as the ten new member states, show more enthusiasm for enlargement, which they regard as the proper way to reunite the European continent, strengthen the EU, express European Union solidarity to candidate or potential candidate countries, and consolidate common European interests and values.

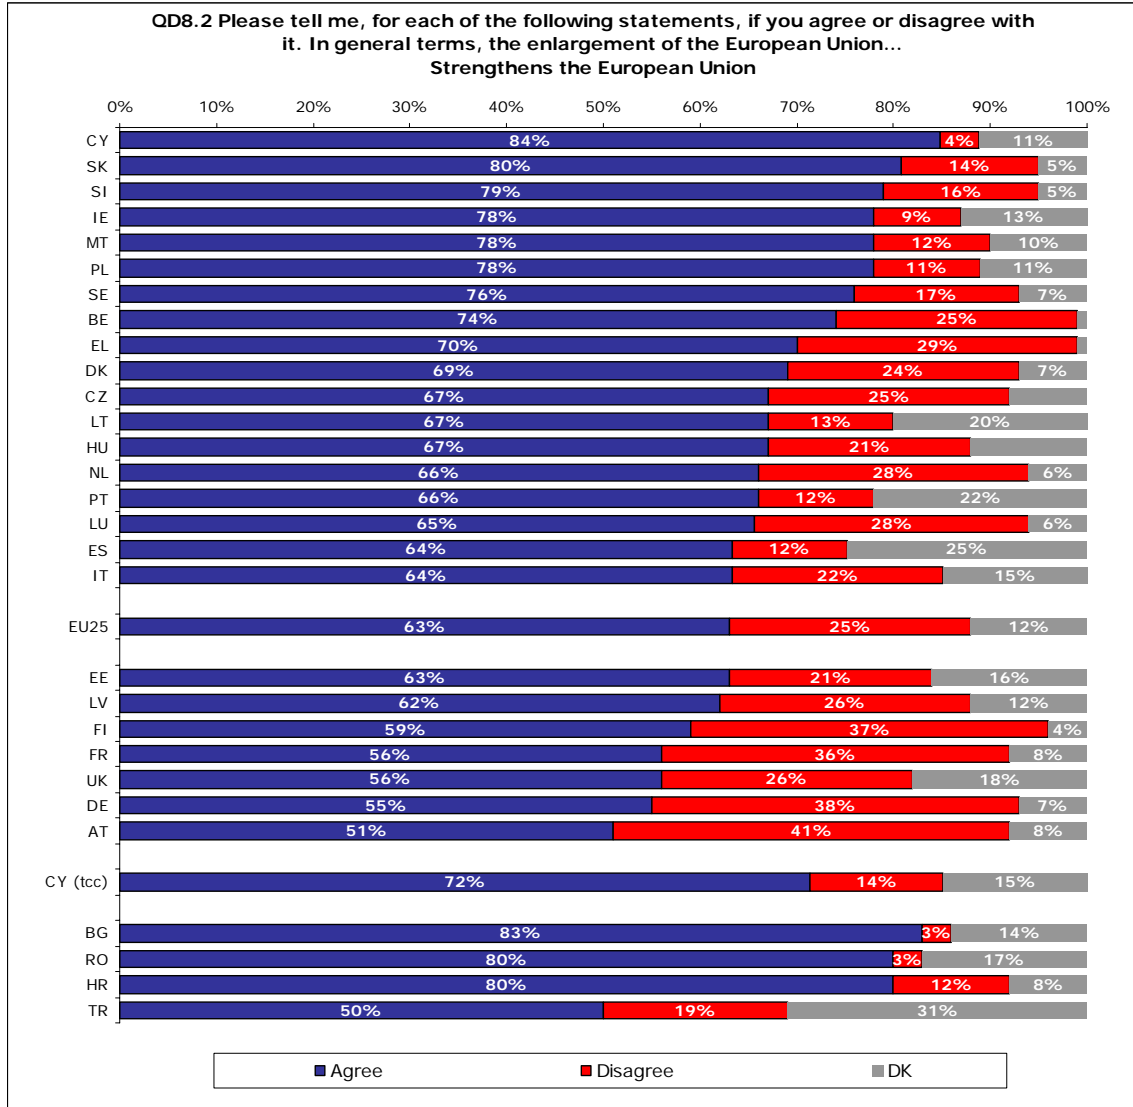

The most sceptical member state is, in all questions, indisputably Austria. Besides, other EU15 member states such as Finland, Germany, France, the Netherlands, Greece and Luxembourg expressed doubts by giving a greater amount of negative answers than the others. Still, the majority in every country agrees with the general arguments for EU enlargement.

Furthermore, a lack of interest and knowledge of European Union issues can be assumed for the population of some southern countries, namely Spain and Portugal, as well as the candidate country Turkey, which resulted a high proportion of "don't know" replies.

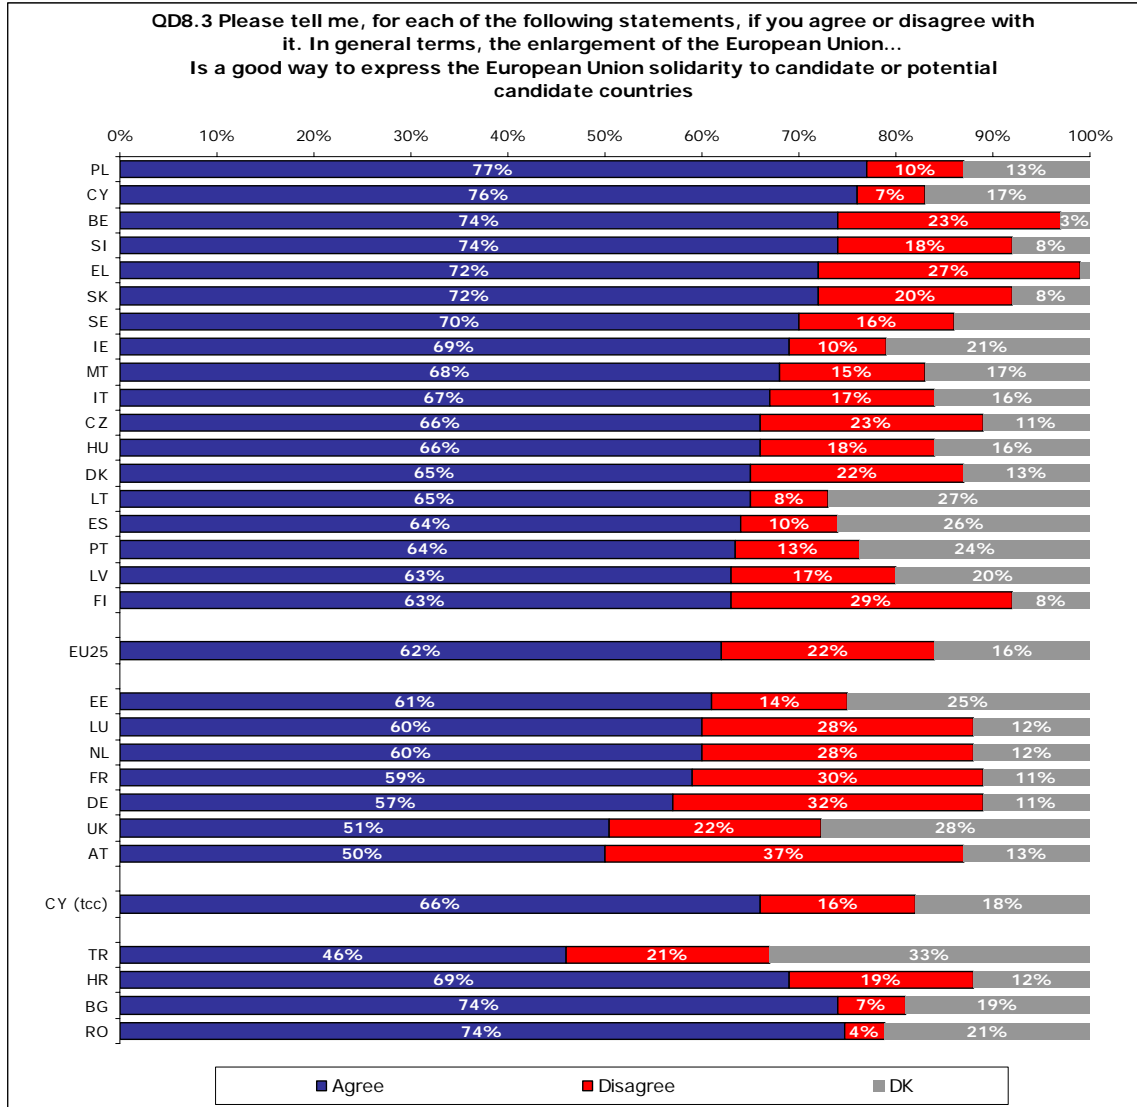

The same tendencies can be observed in the socio-demographic variables as for the question looking at general support for enlargement. (QD30.4)

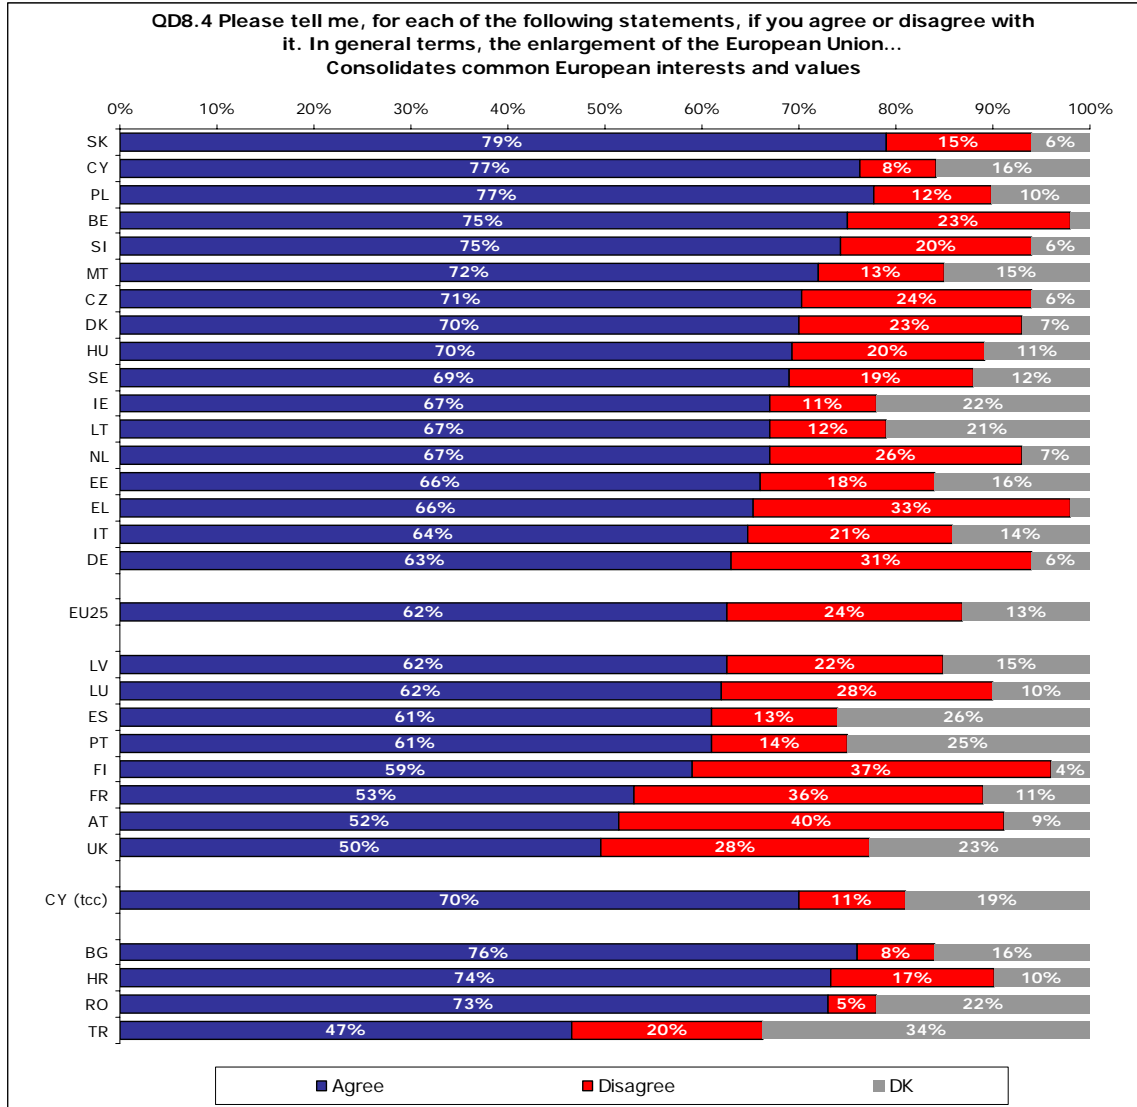

With the exception of Turkey (46%), in all countries the majority believe that the enlargement of the European Union is a good way to reunite the European Continent. However, 37% of Austrians and 35% of Finns surveyed disagree with this view.

Country by country results confirm the general picture; in every country surveyed at least half of the population consider from a global point of view that enlargement strengthens the European Union.

The basic principle of solidarity through the enlargement of the Union is well established in the minds of EU citizens, however roughly one third of Austrian (37%), German (32%) and French (30%) respondents think that enlargement is not a good way to express the EU's solidarity towards candidate and potential candidate countries.

Adopting common European values and interests is one of the key conditions of EU membership. It is therefore interesting to notice that three quarters of Bulgarians (76%), Croats (74%), and Romanians (73%) are convinced of the value consolidation aspect of enlargement. Although 47%, corresponding to a relative majority, of Turks share the same opinion, the 34% “DK” rate suggests that a significant proportion of the population is not interested in EU affairs.

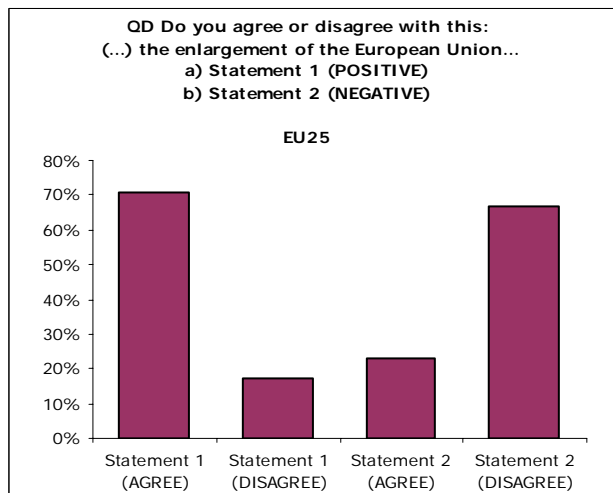

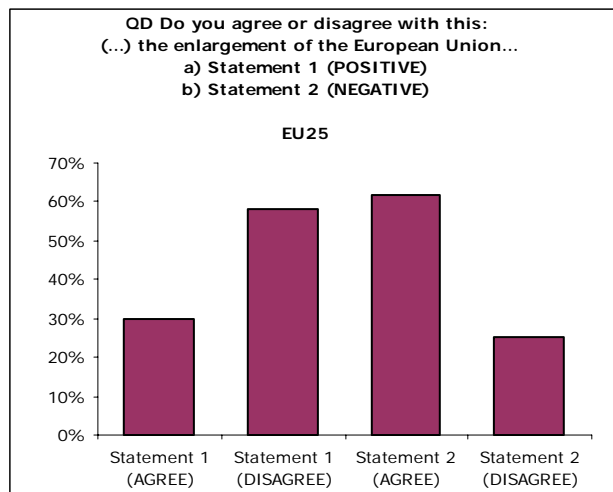

2.2. Specific perceptions of EU enlargement

- The opinion on positive and negative statements about enlargement -

We will explore the political (QD9), economic (QD10) and social (QD11) advantages and disadvantages of the enlargement of the European Union in this chapter. At the same time we will also look at the specific results of this survey which come about from an experimental form of questioning: In each country half of the respondents were asked in a positive and half in a negative, way about the same topic.

This means that, logically, if respondents are consistent in their position on a concrete matter, figures would show one of the following two patterns for each question:

Example 1:

However, if respondents do not have a marked opinion on a specific matter, their answers can be contradictory, which would result in the following patterns:

Example 2:

Nevertheless some statements on the same issue do not contradict each other directly, which means that to agree with one of them does not preclude agreeing with the other one. In such cases we cannot conclude the consistency or contradiction of public opinion should we obtain figures that form any of the above four patterns presented.

- Specific aspects of EU enlargement reveal some inconsistent attitudes in this matter -

By summarizing the observations the following common trends can be outlined:

With respect to the same issue, more interviewees agreed with the positive statements than with the negative ones. It seems that for most respondents it is easier to affirm a positive pronouncement than to object to a negative one.

In addition negatively phrased questions seem to confuse several respondents. This is reflected in two ways:

Firstly, a smaller discrepancy can be observed between the number of “agree” and “disagree” answers in each question, signaling that interviewees are more divided if asked about the same issue in a negatively phrased way.

Secondly, although tendencies are similar in both cases, positive and negative statements, in the country by country analysis, the outcome is different in regard to which countries are on the very top and bottom of the country scale.

		Positive and negative statements	EU25
			AGREE	DISAGREE	DK
QD11a.4	Positive	Facilitates mobility of people like students, businessmen, etc. within Europe	82%	8%	10%
QD10a.2	Negative	Increases jobs transferring to countries where labour is cheaper	75%	14%	11%

2.2.1 Political aspects of EU enlargement

- The broad majority of the EU population recognize the political value of EU enlargement -

Similarly to the results concerning general arguments for EU enlargement, there is a broad consensus among EU citizens surveyed – at least when it comes to positive statements - on the favourable impact of enlargement in political terms. In the case of negative statements, the advantages of enlargement attained a comparatively lower level of recognition. For QD9.1 and QD9.3 the same issue even turned out to be detrimentally influenced by the enlargement.

The same two trends can be observed for each positively expressed statement:

Likewise the outcome of the general incitements question, acceding countries and the new member states tend to appreciate the political blessings of enlargement more. Of the old 15 member states Danish and Swedish, but often Greek and Belgian respondents too, emphasise the political advantages of EU enlargement. These are certainly countries that support enlargement in general.

In contrast Austrians, Finns and the French surveyed controvert the favourable effects of enlargement when it comes to positively phrased statements, which complies with their anti-enlargement attitudes expressed at the general enlargement question.

In regard to negatively phrased questions, two similar tendencies can be observed, as above, however the countries which head the country scale often vary for each question:

Most of the citizens who tend to attach political disadvantages to enlargement, and affirm negative statements are from countries where public opinion is against enlargement in general; that is from Austria, Finland, France, Germany, Luxembourg and the Netherlands.

On the other hand Slovak, Greek and Croat interviewees disagree with the subsequent negative pronouncements. Additional ad hoc opponents are also from countries where public opinion is in favour of enlargement in general. This confirms the generally more positive perception of the political advantages of the enlargement within the ten new member states.

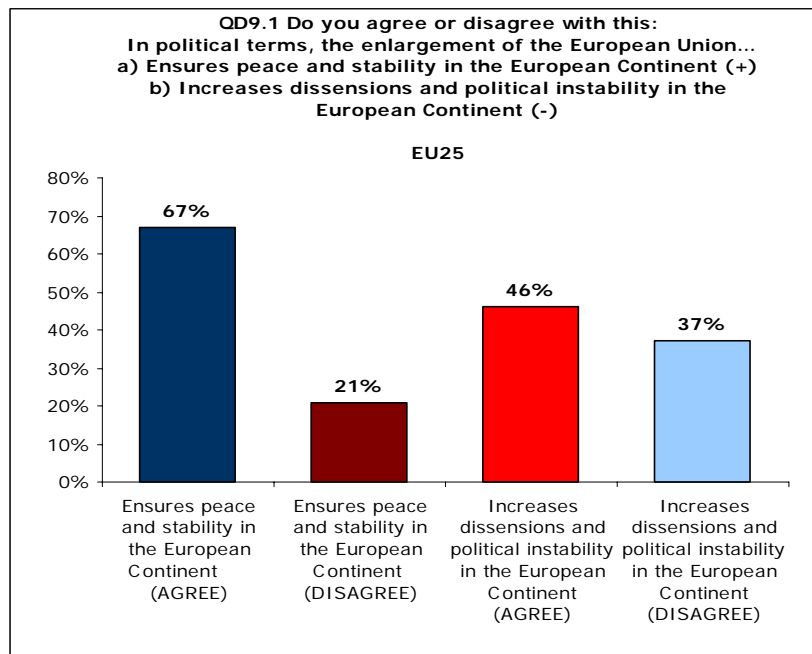

A large number of Turks, Spaniards and Portuguese could not form an opinion on all questions, most probably due to lack of information or interest on EU affairs in general. Due to the confusion caused by negatively phrased statements a higher rate of "DK" answers were recorded for this kind of question in Bulgaria, Romania and often in Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, Ireland and the UK as well.

Similarly to the ones noted for the general questions, the same factors lead to differences among socio-demographic categories regarding the political aspects of enlargement, namely education, occupation and somewhat gender. Men, better educated respondents and managers have agreed with positive statements and disagreed with negative ones. The slightly confusing effect of negatively phrased pronouncements can also be seen in socio-demographic terms; the discrepancies between "agree" and "disagree" answers are reduced.

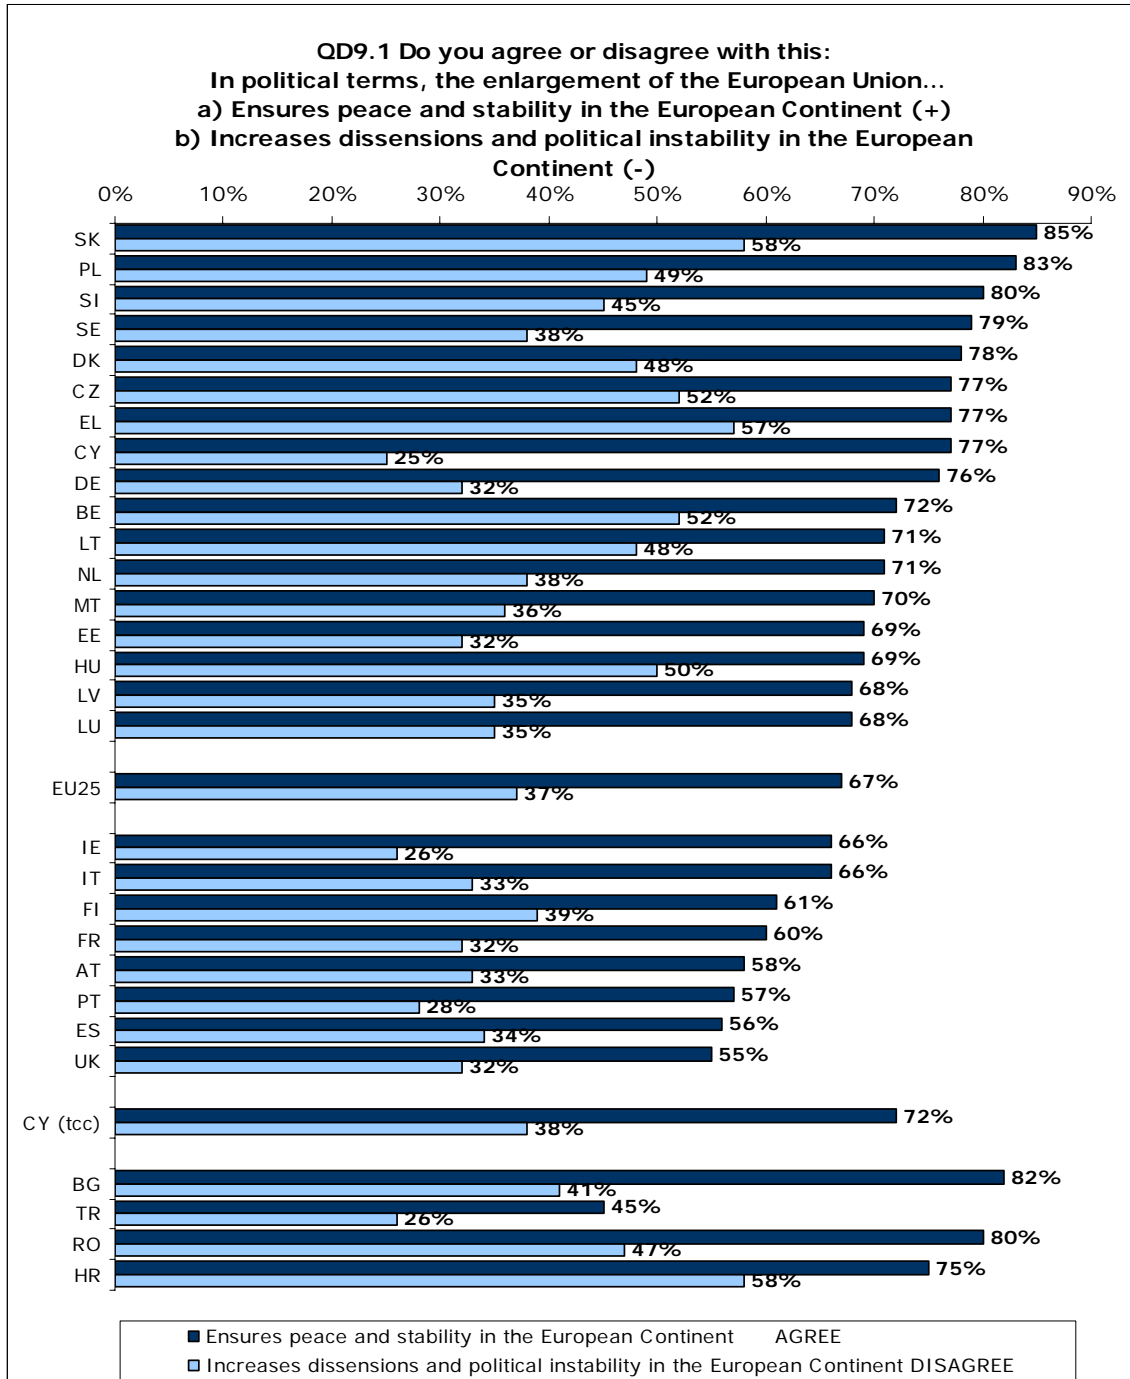

Peace and stability

Questionnaire source: QD9.1¹⁷

Two thirds (67%) of respondents have confirmed that enlargement ensures peace and stability on the European continent. In regard to the reversely phrased question 30 percentage points less interviewees (37%) come to the same conclusion and objected to the negative statement on this matter. What is more, a relative majority of the European Union population (46%) found that EU enlargement increases dissent and political instability in Europe.

¹⁷ QD9.1 Please tell me, for each of the following statements, if you agree or disagree with it.
 In political terms, the enlargement of the European Union...
 a. Ensures peace and stability in the European Continent.
 b. Increases dissensions and political instability in the European Continent.

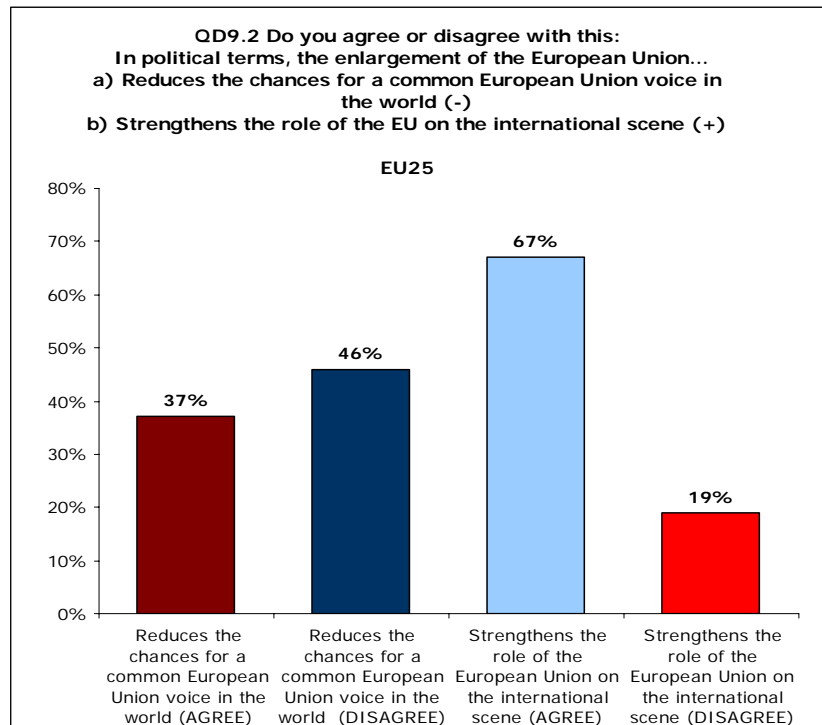

In all countries, the majority agrees with the positive statement that the enlargement ensures peace and stability, while significantly lower share disagrees with the negative statement of the enlargement increasing dissensions and political instability. Croat respondents seem to be the most consistent and Cypriot the least so, when it comes to their opinion regarding the role of EU enlargement in peace and stability in Europe. There is a 17 percentage points difference between the answers given to the positively and the negatively phrased questions for Croats, and 52 for Cypriots.

The role of the European Union in the world

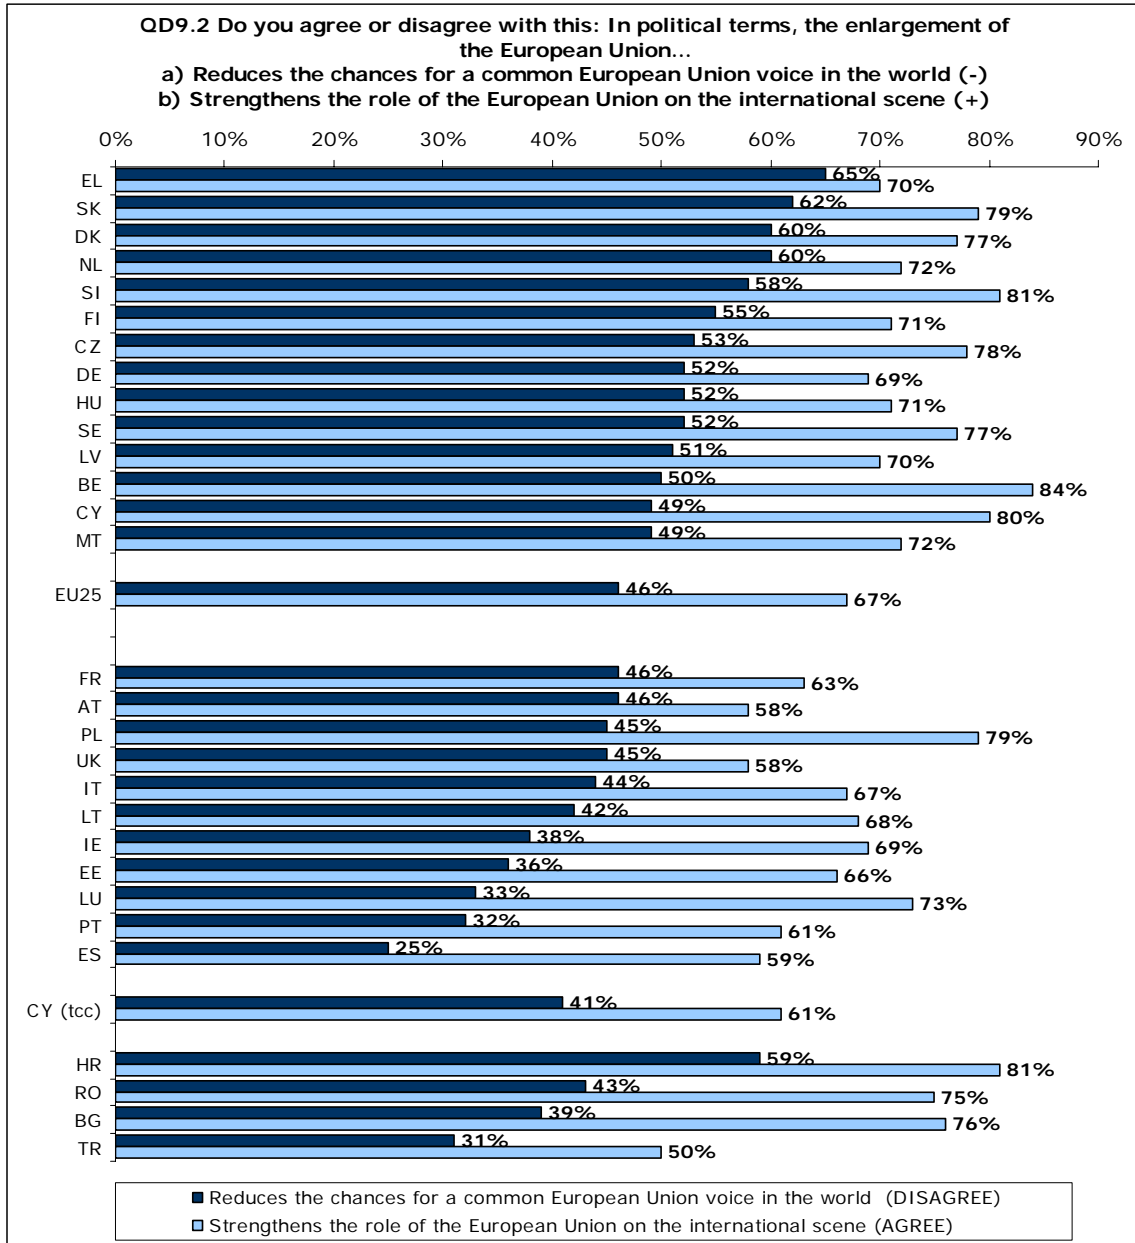

Questionnaire source: QD9.2¹⁸

67% of people living in the Union believe that enlargement strengthens the EU's role on the international scene. This figure is 21 percentage points higher when compared to the one representing respondents who disagree with the parallel negative statement (46%). This discrepancy is similar on the sceptical side too; 37% think enlargement reduces the chances for a common European Union voice in the world. This represents 18 percentage more points of citizens than the 19% polled for objectors to the positive statement.

¹⁸ QD9.2 Please tell me, for each of the following statements, if you agree or disagree with it.
In political terms, the enlargement of the European Union...

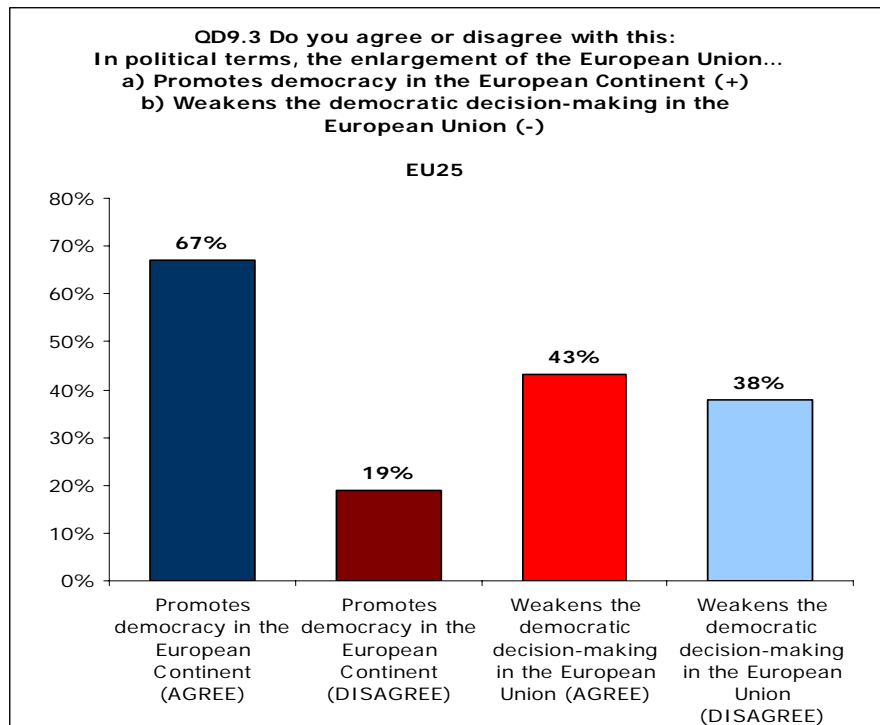

a. Reduces the chances for a common European Union voice in the world.
b. Strengthens the role of the European Union on the international scene.

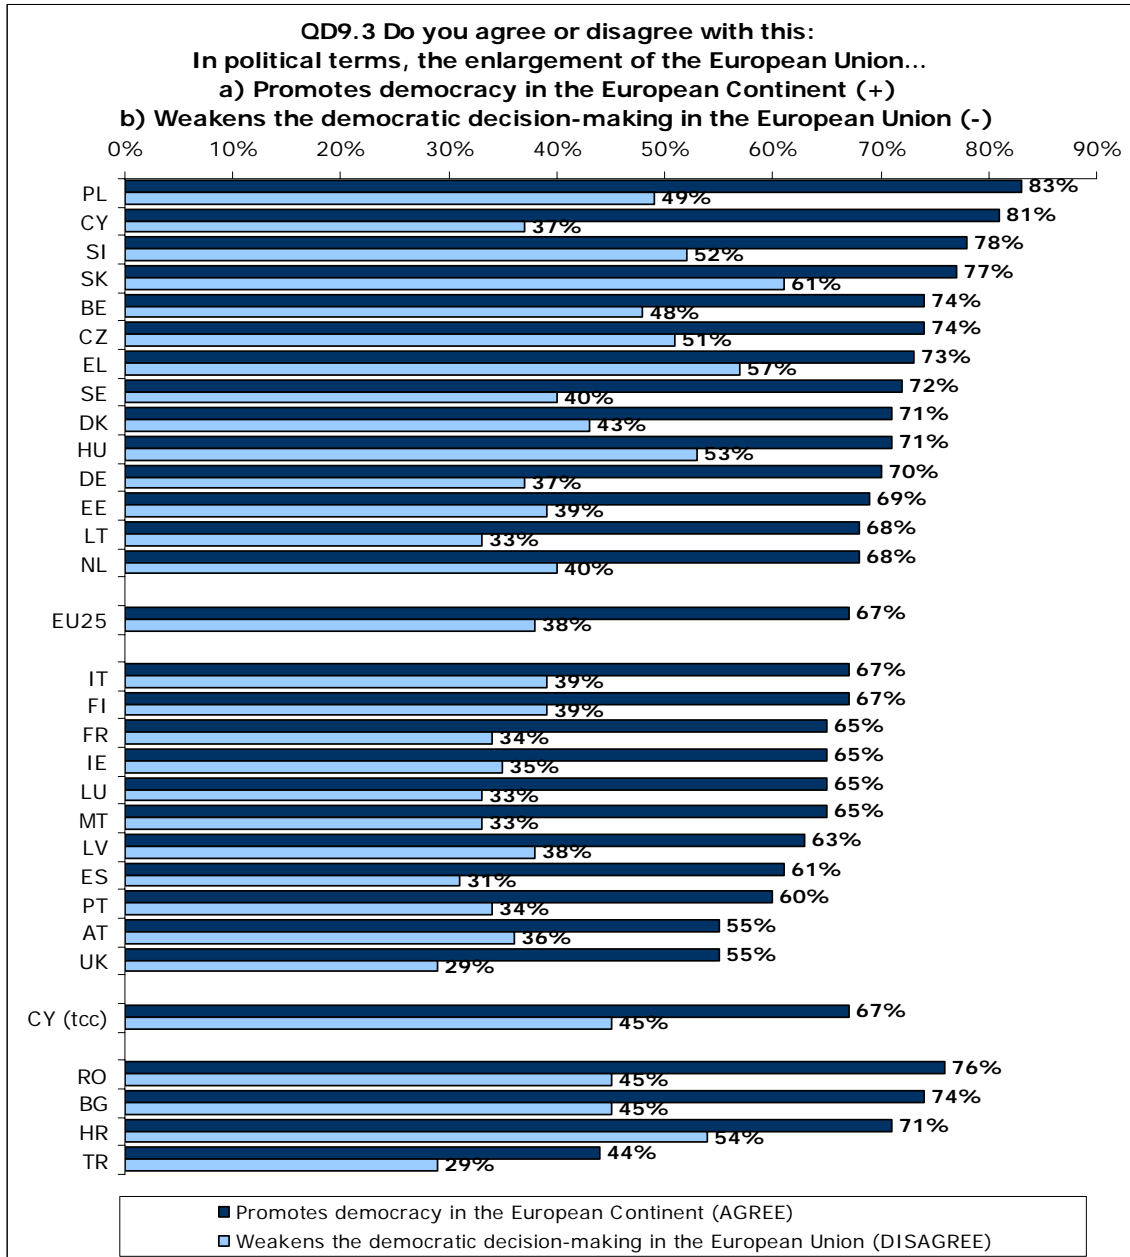

Democracy

Questionnaire source: QD9.3¹⁹

Like peace and stability, democracy is also a topic which divides citizens of the EU25 more than it seems at first glance. Although 67% of Europeans surveyed agree with the democracy promoting impact of enlargement, a relative majority (43%) of citizens hold the view that enlargement weakens democratic decision-making in the European Union. However, we must note that democratic decision-making in the EU represents only a part of the overall democratic life of the European continent, i.e. these statements do not directly contradict each other.

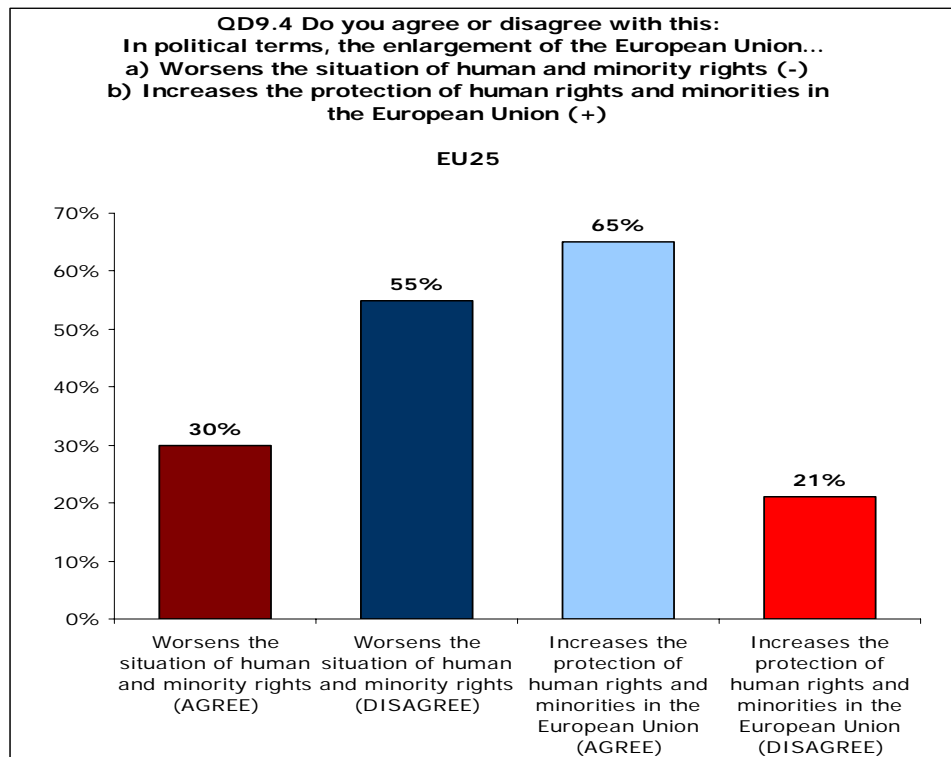

¹⁹ QD9.3 Please tell me, for each of the following statements, if you agree or disagree with it.
 In political terms, the enlargement of the European Union...
 a. Promotes democracy in the European Continent.
 b. Weakens the democratic decision-making in the European Union.

Human rights

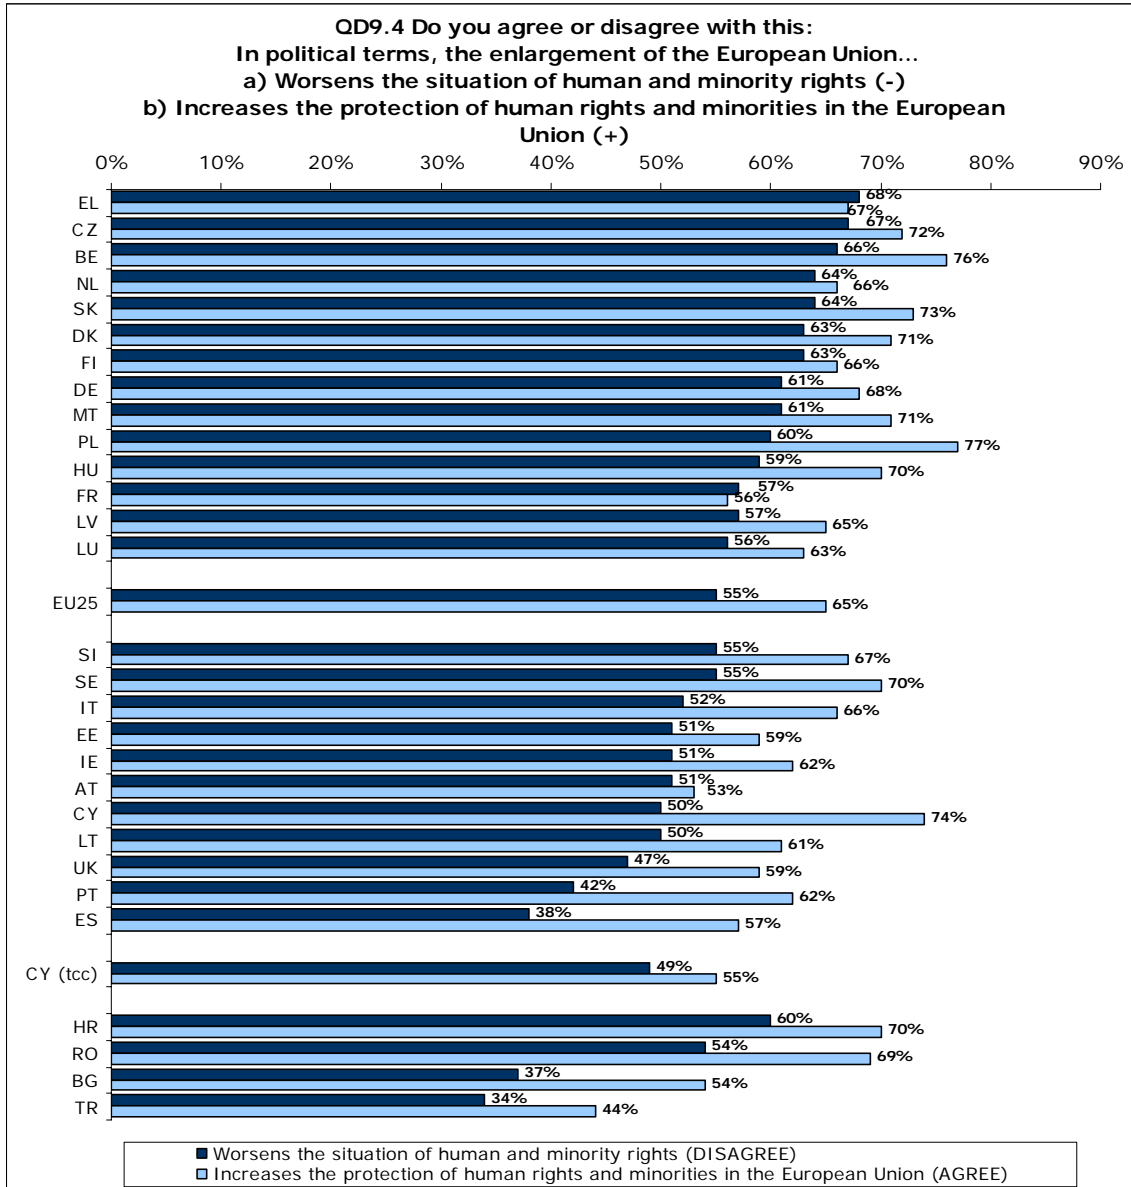

Questionnaire source: QD9.4²⁰

The favourable effect of enlargement on human and minority rights protection is clear. This broad recognition across Europe is reflected in the only 10 percentage points' difference between the 65% support for the positive, and the 55% objection to the negative statement. This implies a consistent position on the effects on human rights among respondents which does not depend on the way the question is asked.

²⁰ QD9.4 Please tell me, for each of the following statements, if you agree or disagree with it. In political terms, the enlargement of the European Union...

a. Worsens the situation of human and minority rights.
 b. Increases the protection of human rights and minorities in the European Union.

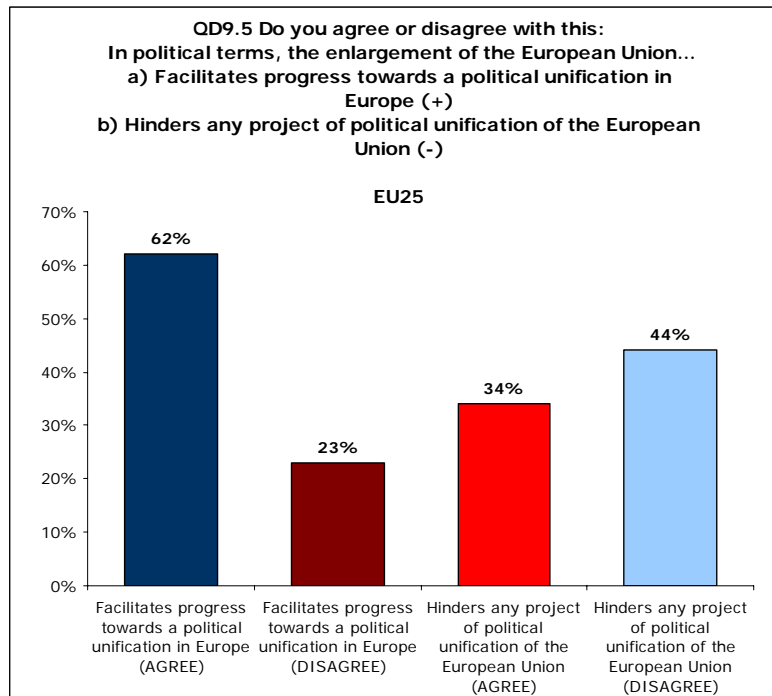

With regard to the consistency of respondents' answers, Belgians are the most convinced and Turks the least convinced that EU enlargement has a favourable influence on human rights protection. 76% of Belgians and 44% of Turks think it increases human rights protection, while respectively 66% and 34% disagree with the statement in other words, that it worsens the situation in this matter.

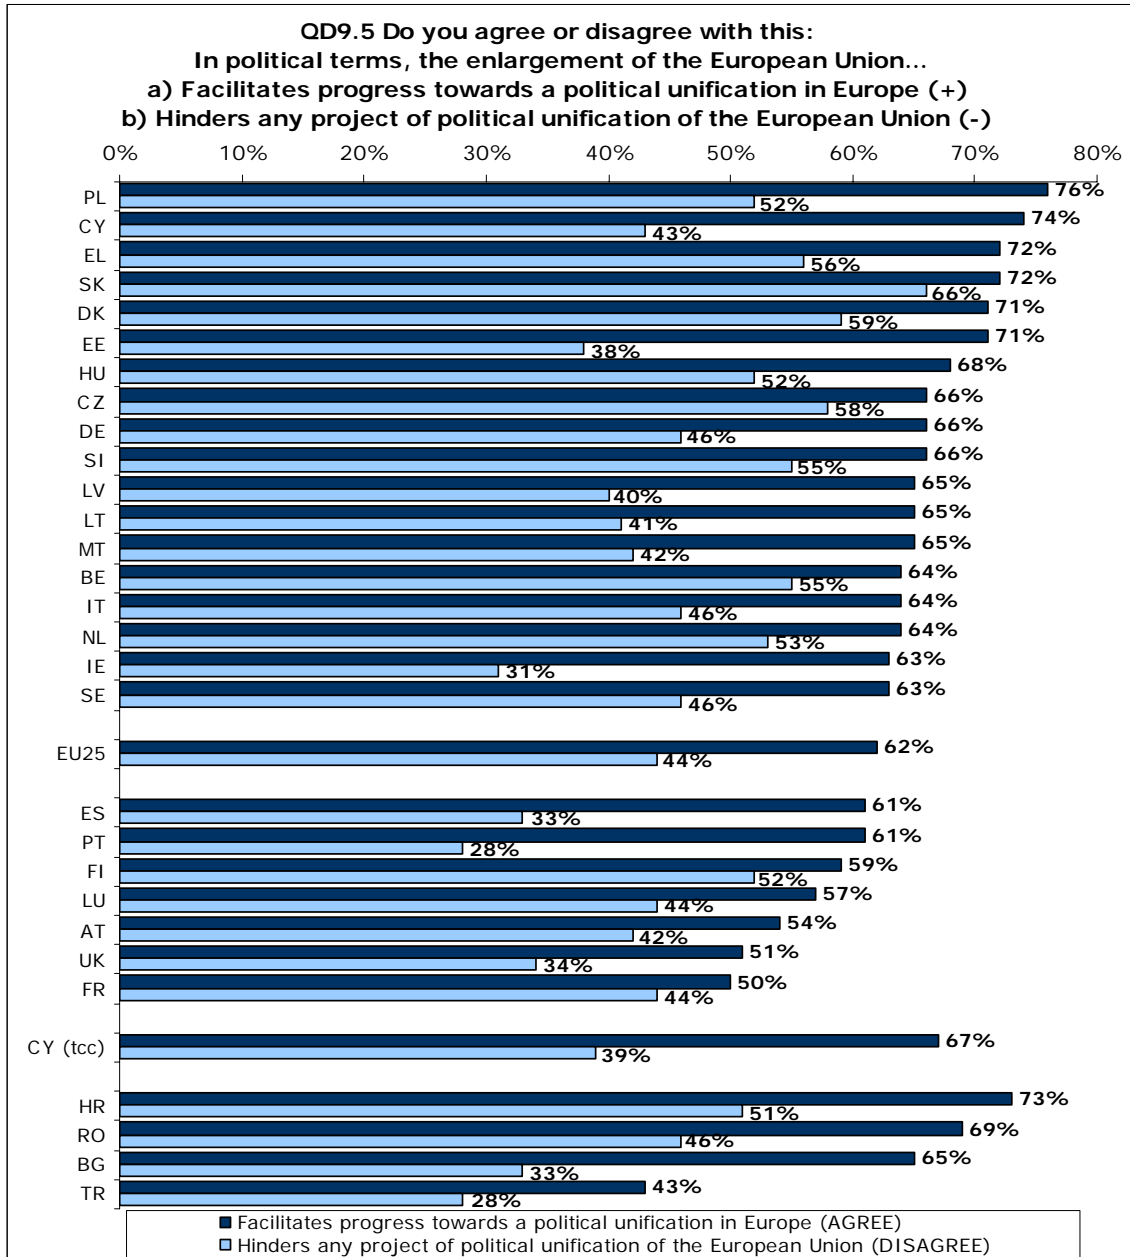

Political unification

Questionnaire source: QD9.5²¹

A relative majority (44%) of the European Union's population do not regard enlargement as an obstacle to political unification in the EU. 62% even think it facilitates progress towards this kind of integration. A significant number of respondents (34%), however, share the opinion that enlargement hinders any political unification project in the European Union. Overall, a slight consistency in opinion can be observed, which tells us that EU citizens generally believe that enlargement could lead to a real political unification.

²¹ QD9.5 Please tell me, for each of the following statements, if you agree or disagree with it.
 In political terms, the enlargement of the European Union...
 a. Facilitates progress towards a political unification in Europe.
 b. Hinders any project of political unification of the European Union.

Taking into account the answers to both questions, it is Slovak respondents who are most convinced and Turkish the least convinced that EU enlargement encourages political unification in Europe. 72% of Slovaks and 43% of Turks surveyed think enlargement facilitates progress towards political unification, while respectively 66% and 28% criticize the suggestion, that it hinders such a development.

2.2.2 Economic aspects of EU enlargement

- Public opinion in the European Union is divided on economic benefits of the EU enlargement -

We will see in a following chapter (2.3) the difference between EU citizens' perception of economic consequences of enlargement and objective economic indicators which are findings of a recent study analysing the consequences of the 2004 enlargement.

EU citizens tend to attach economic disadvantages to enlargement the most. They perceive enlargement as having an overall negative impact on the EU's and also on their own countries' economy. However, results reflected a quite divided European public opinion on the economic aspects of enlargement, since a significant minority of Europeans shares the opposite view.

Once again several Turks, Spaniards, Lithuanians and Portuguese had difficulties answering the questions: the proportion of "DK" replies is quite high for these questions.

In the case of positive statements, men, respondents with a higher educational background and a high socio-economic status tend to be more optimistic regarding the economic aspects of enlargement. This can be explained perhaps with the fact that their personal economic situation is usually more secure.

On the other hand in the case of the statement "enlargement makes the EU the biggest trade player in the world" alongside negative pronouncements, notable differences cannot be observed.

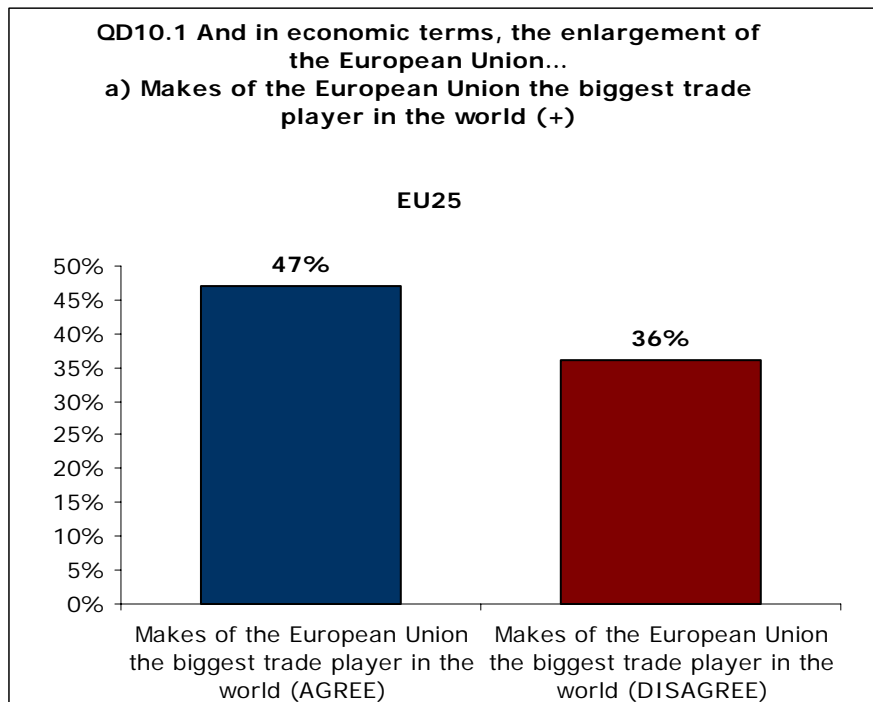

Globalisation

Citizens of the EU25 are not totally convinced that a larger European Union would have a better chance of meeting the challenges of globalisation and enhancing its capacity to compete with other international players. They are also quite divided about whether enlargement encourages economic development, moreover many think it increases labour transfer to countries where it is cheaper.

Since QD10.1 presents two quite different aspects of globalisation, these will be analysed separately.

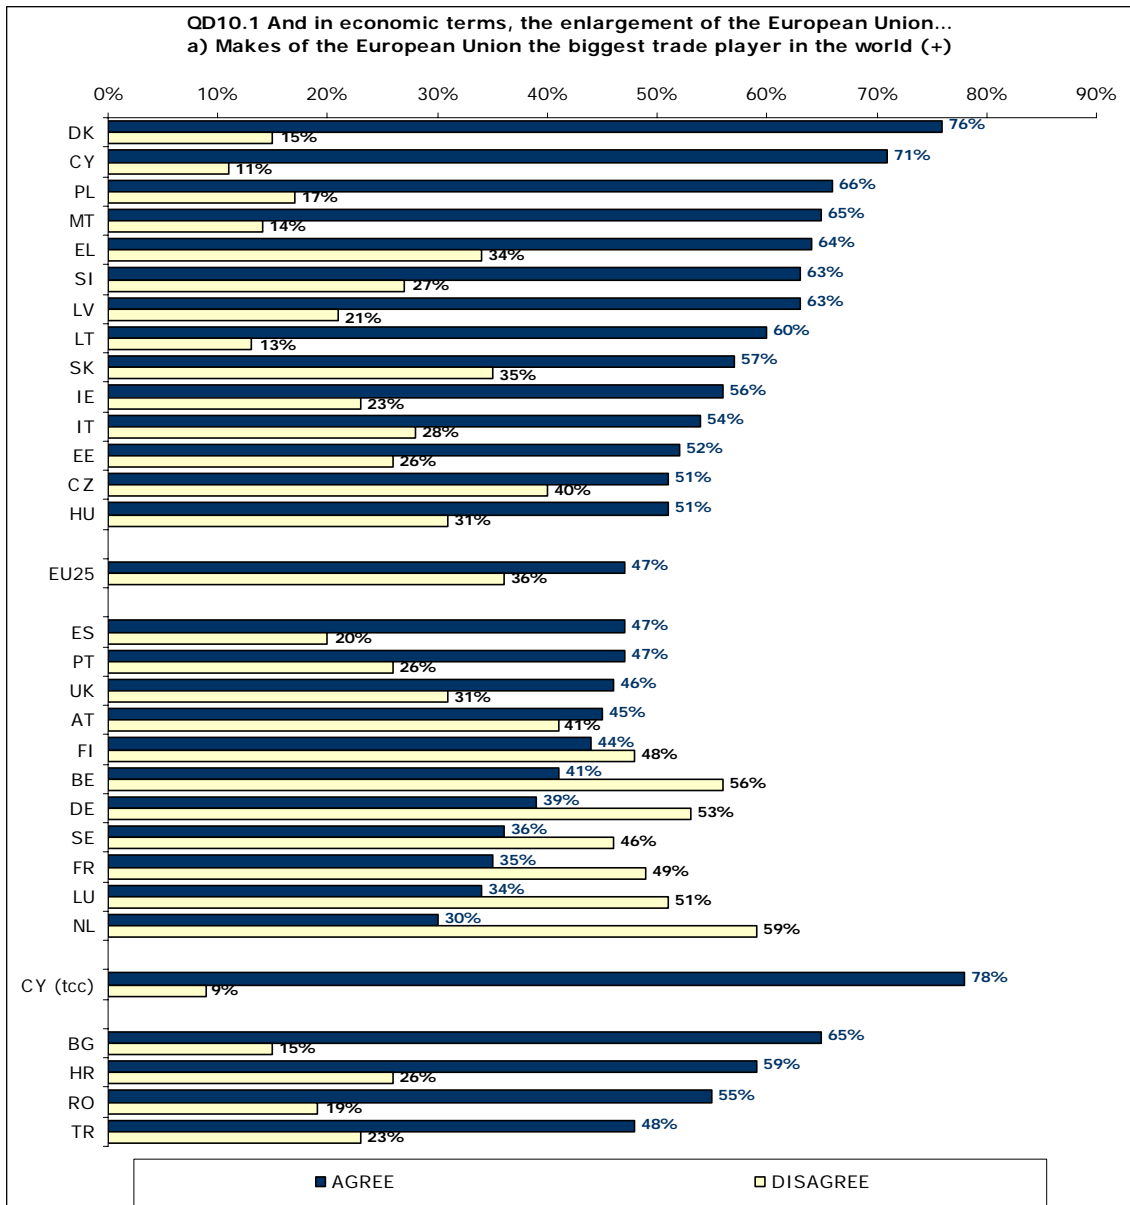

Questionnaire source: QD10.a.1²²

The statement "EU enlargement makes the Union the biggest trade player in the world" seems to be very ambitious in the eyes of Europeans interviewed; therefore over a third of them (36%) have expressed doubt in their answers. Nonetheless, a relative majority (47%) do believe the EU will become the biggest trade player thanks to enlargement.

²² QD10a. And in economic terms, the enlargement of the European Union...
 1. Makes of the European Union the biggest trade player in the world.

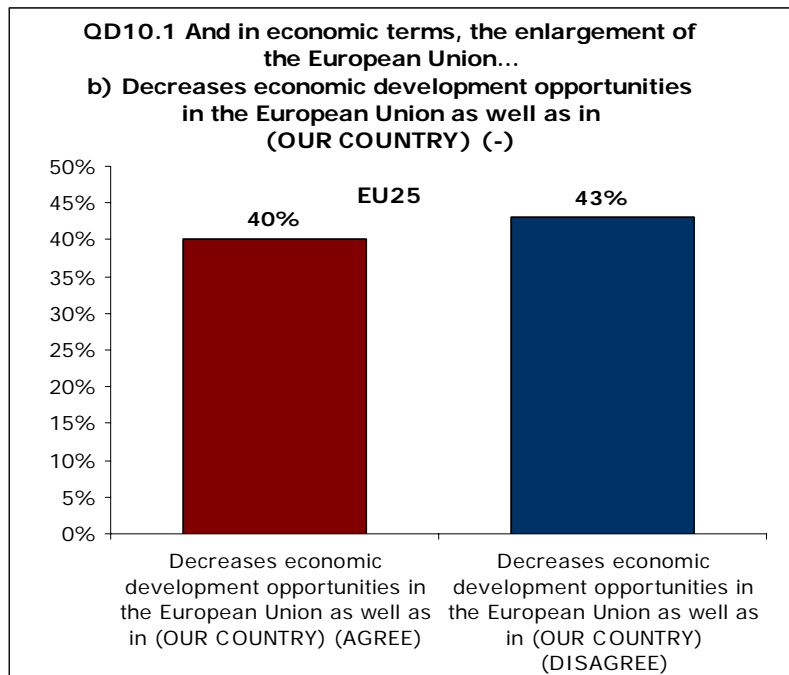

Public opinion in countries that in general favour enlargement tends to show more optimism in this matter (new member states, acceding countries, Denmark - 76% and Greece - 64%), whereas respondents in countries where public opinion is less enlargement-friendly (the Netherlands – 59%, Belgium – 56% and Germany – 53%) are inclined to be sceptical.

Questionnaire source: QD10.b.1²³

Public opinion in the European Union is divided over whether enlargement generates opportunities or barriers for the European economy.

A relative majority of the EU population (43%) do not consider that enlargement limits economic development opportunities in the European Union as well as in their home country. Only 3 percentage less points respondents (40%) take the opposite view.

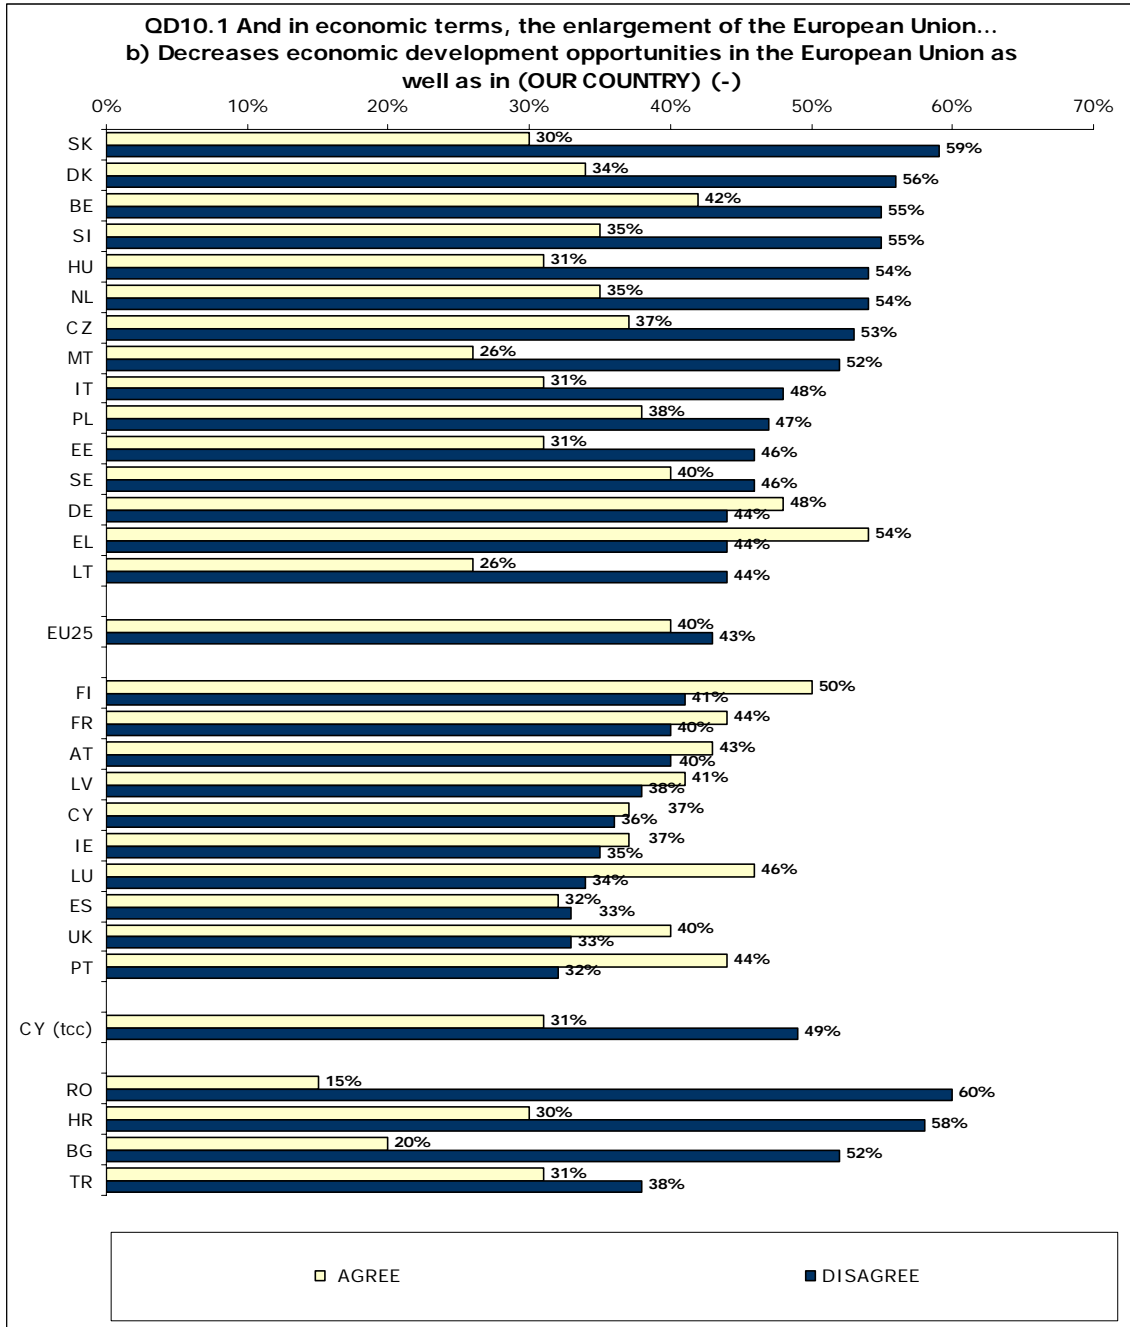

Country results mostly follow the general and political enlargement trend. Nevertheless not only new member states, acceding countries and Danes (56%) were more optimistic on this matter, but also the Belgians (55%) and Dutch (54%) who actually tend to oppose enlargement in general.

On the other hand, Greeks who favour enlargement in general, seem to worry most about decreasing economic opportunities (54%).

When comparing the country results of these previously presented aspects of globalisation, we can observe that in case of Belgium, the Netherlands and Greece figures indeed suggest controversial contradictory attitudes in relation to their general stance concerning the EU enlargement.

²³ QD10b. And in economic terms, the enlargement of the European Union...

1. Decreases economic development opportunities in the European Union as well as in (OUR COUNTRY).

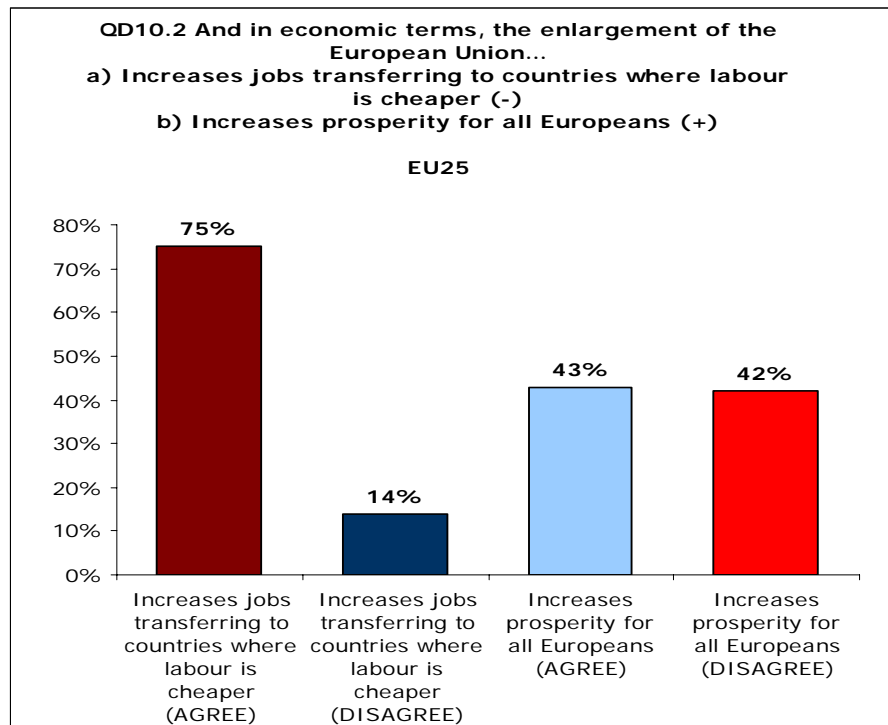

Questionnaire source: QD10.2²⁴

The following two statements are not totally comparable, yet the idea behind them is to find out if citizens consider that enlargement provides benefits for the whole, or only for certain groups of the EU population.

An overwhelming majority of citizens (75%) agree with the labour transfer effect of enlargement, whereby they confirm their perception of the actual tendencies of today's market economies. The Internal Market does indeed ensure a free movement of goods, services, people and capital, enabling a transfer of jobs from one Member State to another.

In addition, yet again, the outcome of the other question suggests respondents' pretty ambivalent expectations. 43% think the enlargement of the EU increases prosperity for all Europeans, while 42% do not agree with the universal benefit of enlargement in economic terms.

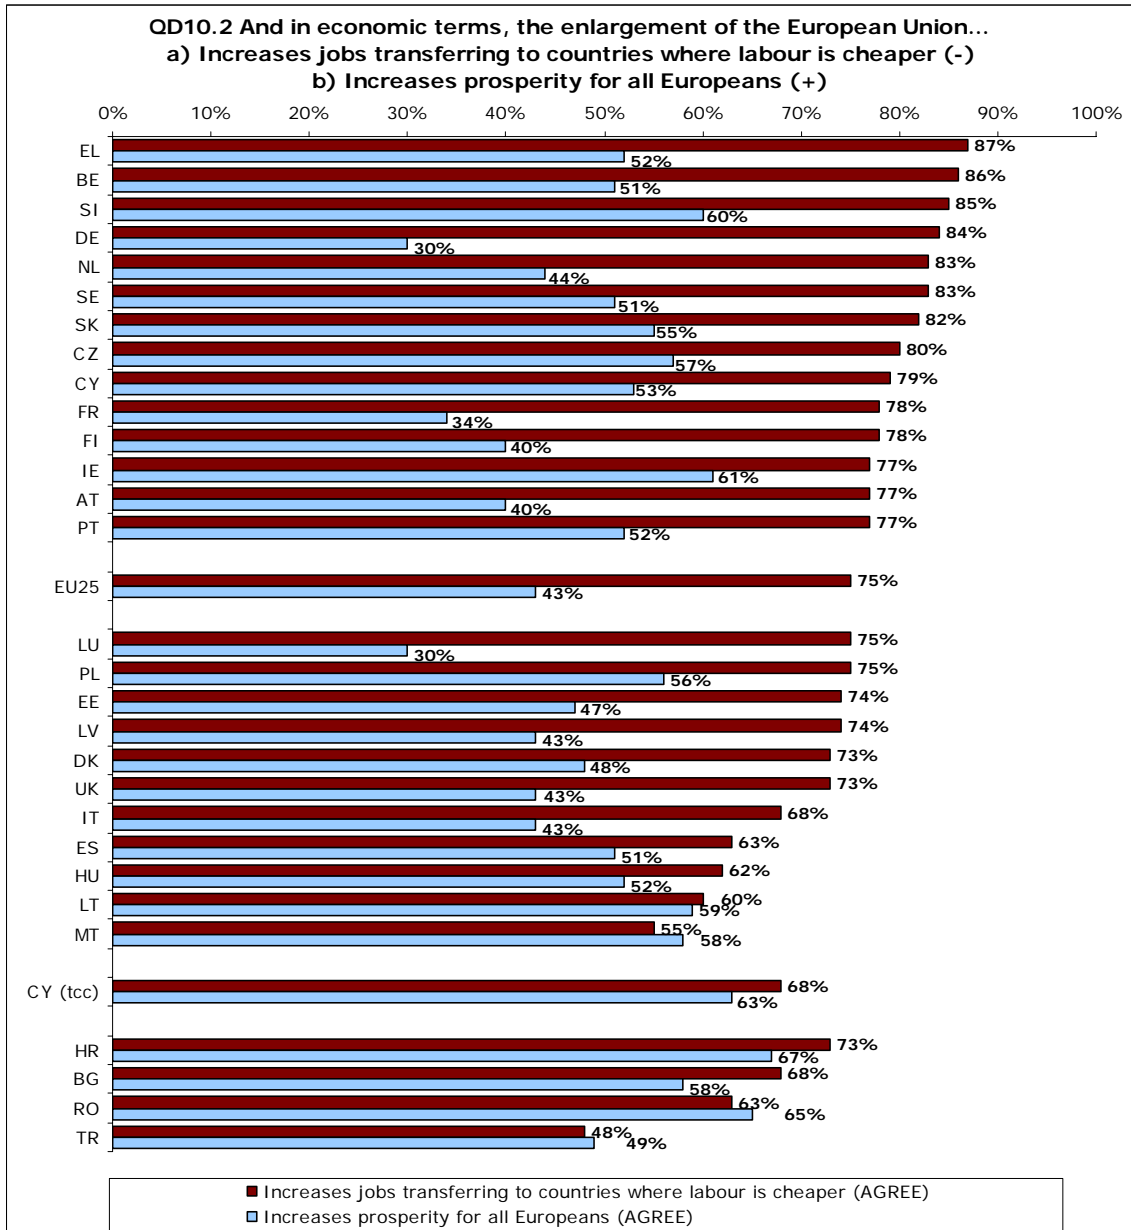

There is practically no difference between the old 15 (76%) and the 10 new member states (74%) in their perception of labour transfer to countries where labour is cheaper. This is reflected in the individual country figures: for example Greeks (87%), Belgians (86%) and Slovenes (85%) agree the most with this statement.

²⁴ QD10.2 And in economic terms, the enlargement of the European Union...

a. Increases jobs transferring to countries where labour is cheaper.

b. Increases prosperity for all Europeans.

As regards the positive statement “enlargement increases prosperity for all Europeans”, country results can be divided again over whether they support or oppose enlargement in general: Croat (67%), Romanian (65%) and Turkish Cypriot (63%) respondents think the most that enlargement contribute to the prosperity of the whole Union, meanwhile the majority of German (63%), Luxembourgish (57%), French (55%) and Finnish (56%) interviewees expressed their doubts on this concept.

As an additional socio-demographic feature, it is interesting to note that people born within the EU (but not in the surveyed country 56%) and outside Europe (55%), seem to believe more that enlargement brings prosperity for all Europeans than average EU citizens (43%).

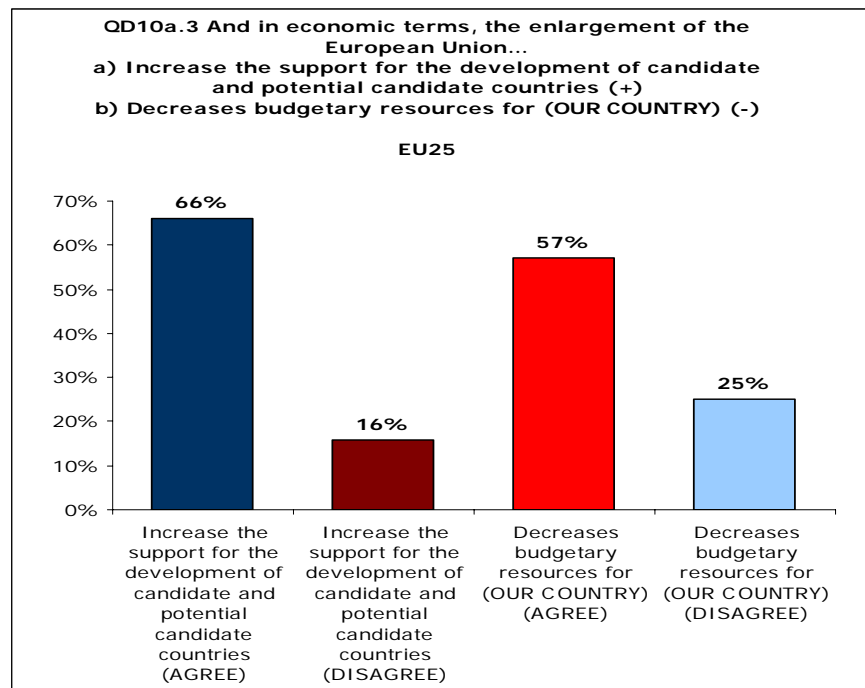

Financing EU enlargement

Questionnaire source: QD10.3²⁵

Two thirds of Europeans polled (66%) affirm the important role that enlargement plays in supporting the economic development of candidate and potential candidate countries.

Nevertheless this support of (potential) candidate countries could burden the EU budget: 57% of the EU25 population consider that enlargement, and thus the financial support of enlargement, decreases budgetary resources for their own country.

On the one hand, the majority of EU citizens agree with the idea of supporting candidate countries, but at the same time, they fear this would affect their personal economic status unfavourably.

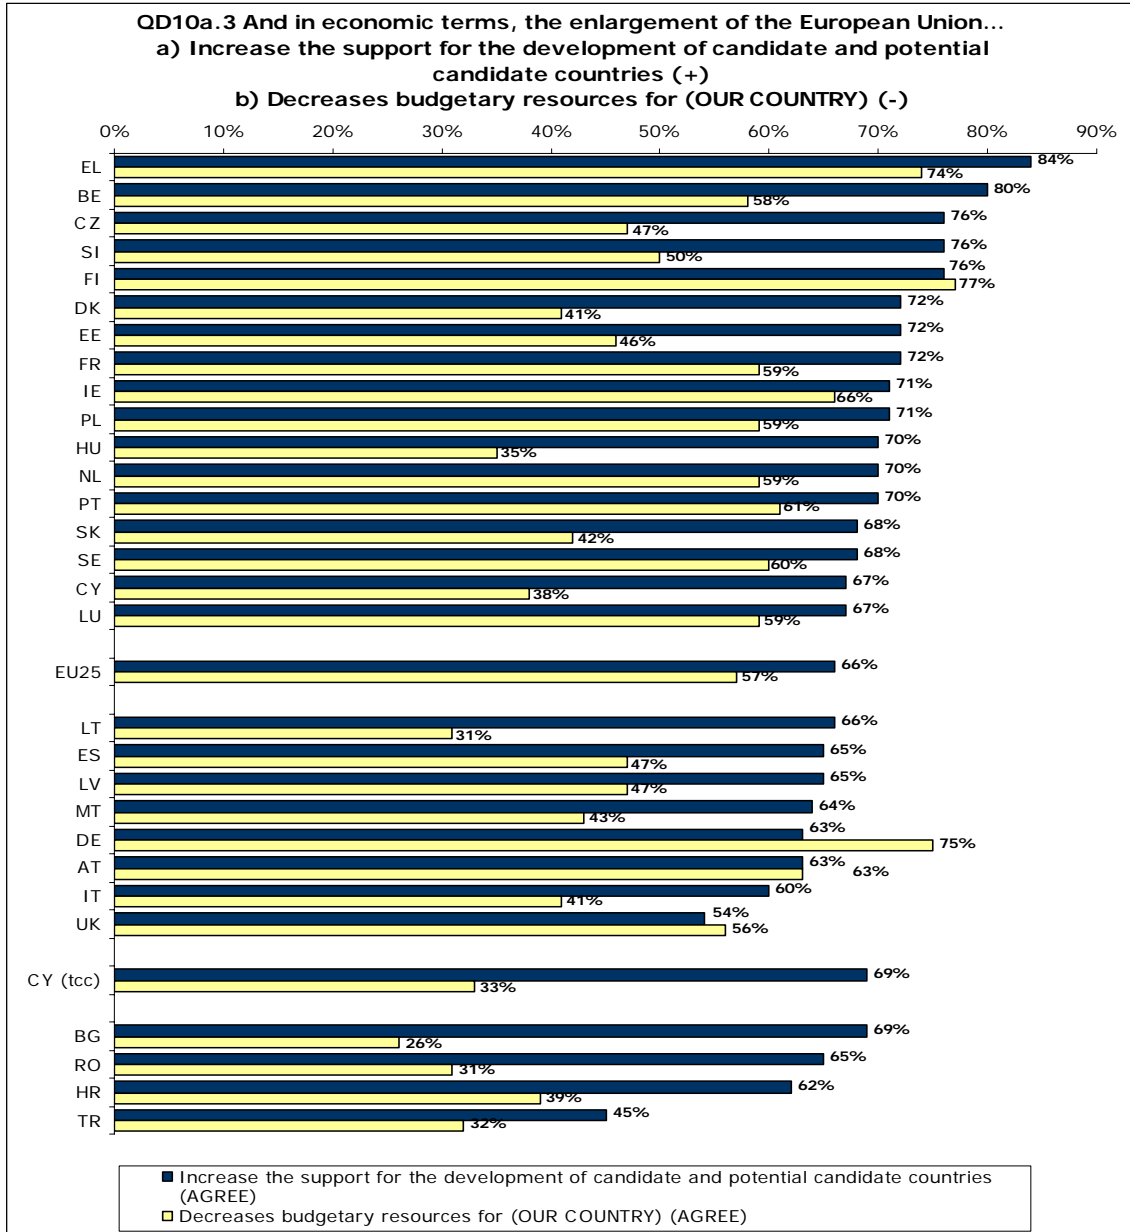

Practically speaking, in all countries surveyed the “developing function” of the enlargement process is recognized. This is the case particularly for Greece (84%), Belgium (80%), the Czech Republic (76%), Slovenia (76%) and Finland (76%).

In contrast the Finns (77%), Germans (75%) and Greeks (74%) surveyed worry about the decrease in their budgetary resources the most.

²⁵ QD10.3 And in economic terms, the enlargement of the European Union...

a. Increase the support for the development of candidate and potential candidate countries.
b. Decreases budgetary resources for (OUR COUNTRY).

It must be noted, however, that the amount spent on enlargement from the EU budget is lower than EU citizens perhaps assume. Taking the example of the most recent, and largest enlargement in 2004, an ex post facto study points out the following²⁶: "In total about € 28 billion has been transferred to the 10 new Member States over the last 15 years.²⁷ The impact of enlargement on the budgetary resources of both the old and new Member States has been manageable. The financial contribution by old Member States to enlargement remains limited as it represents only 0.1% of their GDP."

²⁶ Communication from the Commission to the Council and the European Parliament "Enlargement, Two Years After – An Economic Success", COM(2006)200, adopted on 03 May 2006.
http://ec.europa.eu/economy_finance/publications/occasional_papers/2006/ocp24en.pdf

²⁷ This figure corresponds to actual disbursements, whereas 40 billion were foreseen as commitments 2004-2006.

2.2.3 Social aspects of EU enlargement

- The social consequences of the enlargement are thought to be a mixed blessing -

The social aspects of EU enlargement divide the European Union population more than political ones but less than economic aspects. Although social advantages are recognized by the broad majority and positive statements implying such have been confirmed, some possible negative consequences of the enlargement also concern a significant majority of respondents.

These concerns equally worry citizens from both the old and the ten new member states; they are afraid of an increase in crime, illegal immigration and settlement of workers from future EU member states.

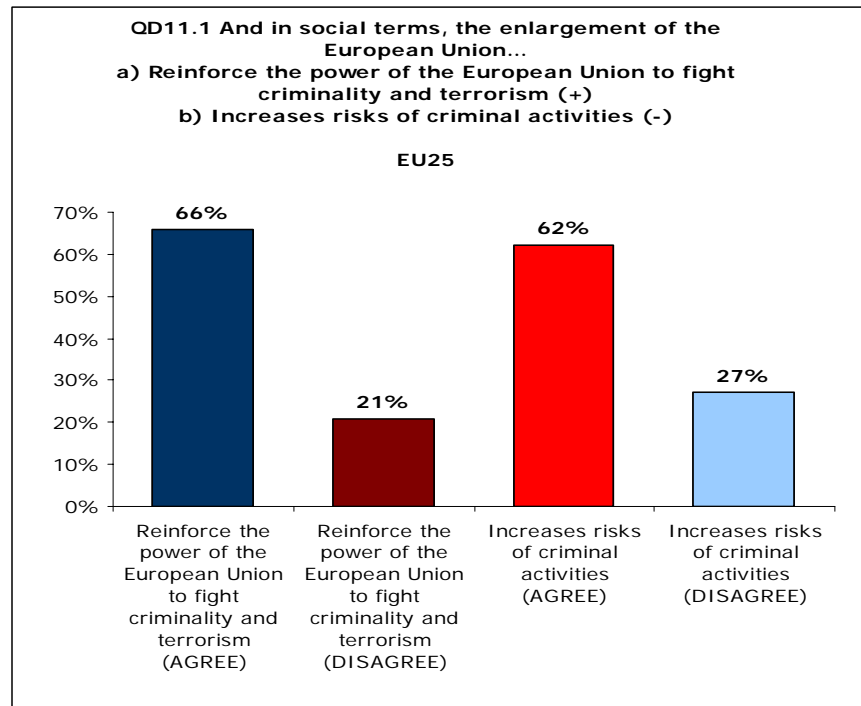

Cultural diversity and mobility issues divide European public opinion. Trends differ from the ones shown in questions exploring the general support for enlargement.

As before, most likely due to the lack of knowledge of or interest in EU affairs in general, a high number of Turks, Spaniards, Portuguese, Lithuanians and Romanians replied "don't know" to the following questions as well.

Criminality

Questionnaire source: QD11.1²⁸

Two thirds of the people living in the Union (66%) believe that enlargement reinforces the power of the EU to fight criminality and terrorism. Almost the same proportion of EU citizens' (62%) fear that risks of criminal activities will increase because of enlargement. Though criminality is the subject of both statements, the existence of the one phenomenon does not exclude the other. It must also be noted, that the "increased risk of crime" implies a potential rather than a definite consequence.

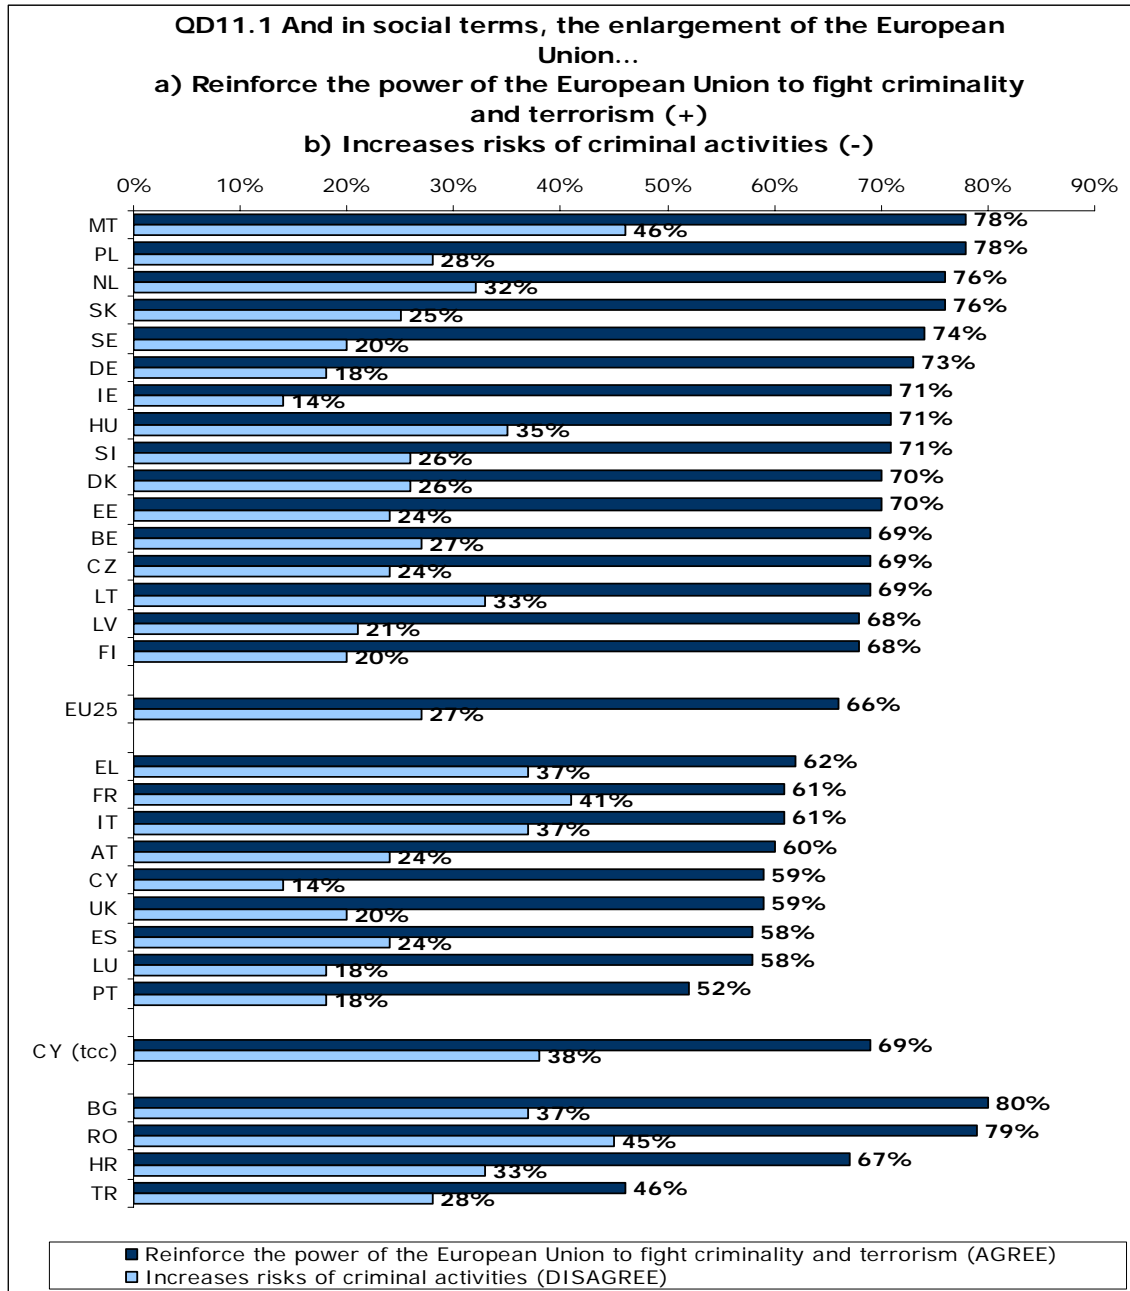

At the country level, in addition to citizens from countries where public opinion is in favour of enlargement in general (the 10 new member states, acceding countries, Sweden 74%, Denmark 70% and Ireland 71%), Dutch (76%) and German (73%) respondents also tend to see some likely benefits of enlargement from a global point of view, namely the opportunity for better cooperation in fighting – often cross-border - crime and terrorism.

Although roughly one third of Austrians (34%), Luxembourgers (31%) and Finns (29%) interviewed have expressed their reservations on this matter, the majority of the population in these countries (Austria 60%, Luxembourg 58% and Finland 68%), still believe in the reinforcing effect of enlargement on cooperation in criminal affairs.

²⁸ QD11.1 And in social terms, the enlargement of the European Union...

a. Reinforce the power of the European Union to fight criminality and terrorism.
b. Increases risks of criminal activities.

As previously mentioned there is no difference between old (62%) and new member states (62%) in regard to their fear of increased crime risk; however respondents who are afraid of this potential effect the most, are from the EU15 (Luxembourg 80%, Germany 78%, Finland 76%, Sweden 76% and Ireland 76%). On the other hand Maltese (46%), Romanian (45%) and French (41%) interviewees worry about such risks the least.

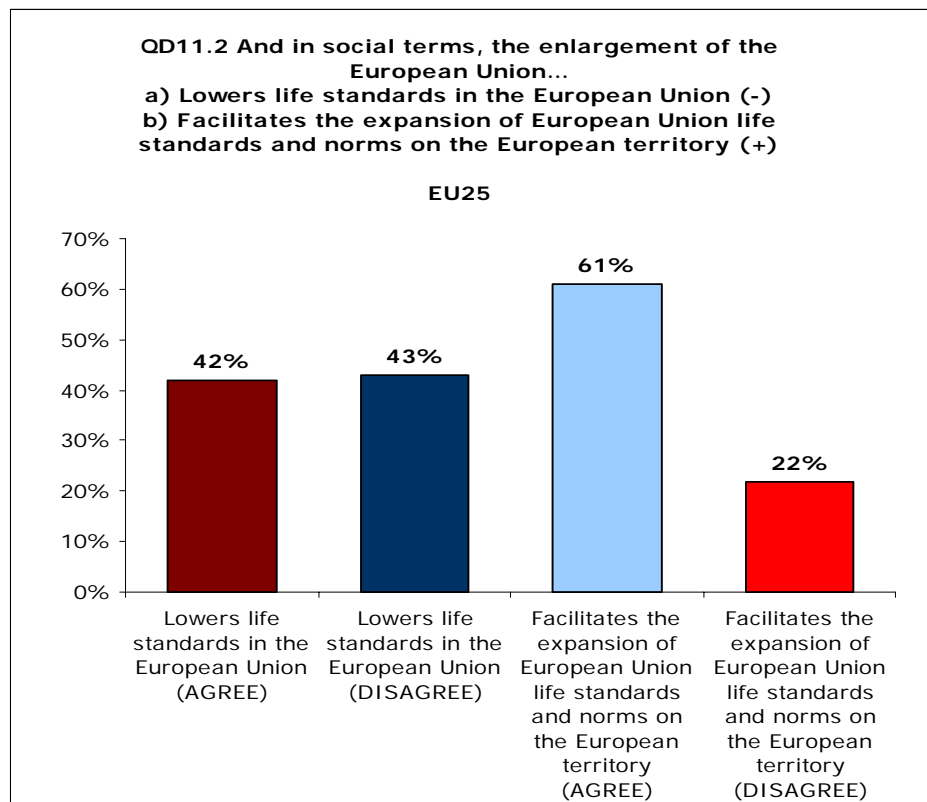

The potential increase in crime divides the EU population in terms of age too; as it is often the case for criminality and security matters, the older the respondents are, the more they fear for their safety, and thus see a potential increase of risks of crime due to enlargement.

Life standard

Questionnaire source: QD11.2²⁹

The EU population seems to be quite divided on how people estimate the impact of enlargement on life standards. On the one hand, 61% see it as a chance for an expansion of EU life standards in Europe. On the other hand, only 43% think that this equalisation will not be realised by a lowering of current standards. Almost as many respondents (42%) consider that enlargement brings about a reduction in living standards.

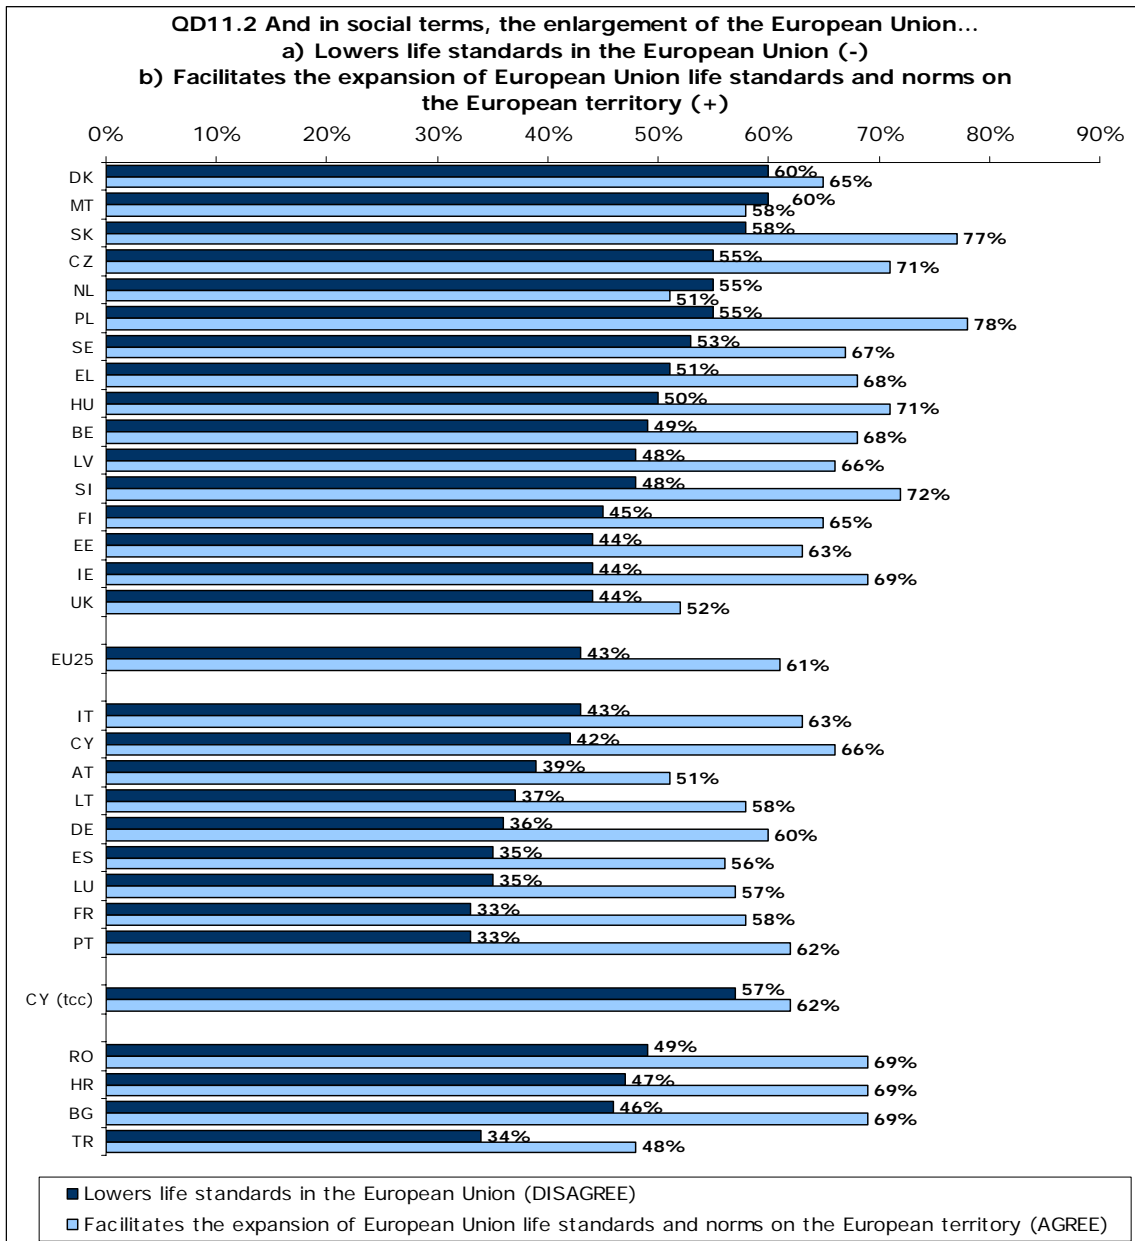

Country results follow the trends we have seen when analysing the general and political aspects of enlargement. Respondents in countries where public opinion is in favour of enlargement such as Poland (78%), Slovakia (77%), the Czech Republic (71%) and Hungary (71%) are the most convinced that enlargement facilitates the expansion of EU life standards. On the contrary 58% of Germans, 54% of French, 53% of Austrians, 50% of Finns and Luxembourgers surveyed consider that enlargement lowers the standard of living in the EU.

²⁹ QD11.2 And in social terms, the enlargement of the European Union...

a. Lowers life standards in the European Union.

b. Facilitates the expansion of European Union life standards and norms on the European territory.

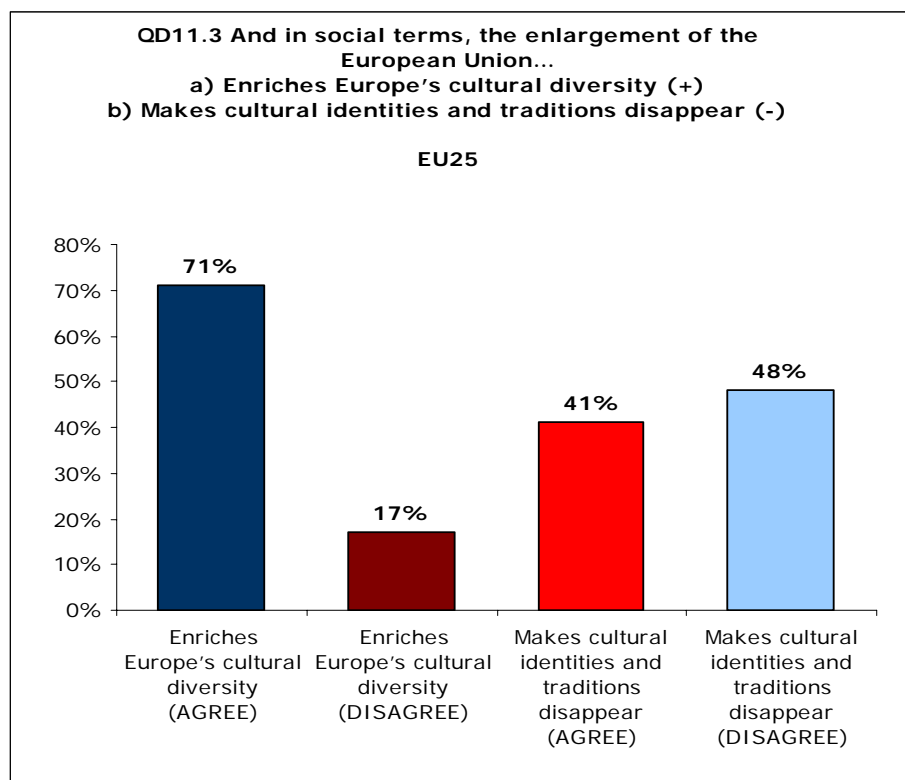

In socio-demographic terms men (67%), the better educated (end of studies at age 15: 52%; 16-19: 60%; 20+: 72%; still studying: 67%) as well as managers (73%), self-employed (68%) and students (67%) agree more often with the statement that enlargement facilitates the expansion of European life standards and norms. In contrast, people who were born in Europe but outside the EU seem to be less optimistic concerning the expansion of EU living standards on European territory; compared to the EU25 average (61% agree and 22% disagree) only 45% trust in the expansion of EU living standards, while 34% expect the reverse.

Cultural diversity

Questionnaire source: QD11.3³⁰

Seven out of ten (71%) EU citizens agree that enlargement enriches Europe's cultural diversity. In respect to the reverse question, 48% objected to the disappearance of cultural identities and traditions, while quite a significant number of interviewees (41%) foresee this possible negative consequence. It seems that Europeans surveyed are enthusiastic about the positive aspect of enlargement, but at the same time they fear for the maintenance of their cultural identities.

Apart from the new member states, the population of Belgium (82%) and Luxembourg (78%), Greece (80%), as well as Finland (78%) and Sweden (77%) believe the most that enlargement enriches Europe's cultural diversity.

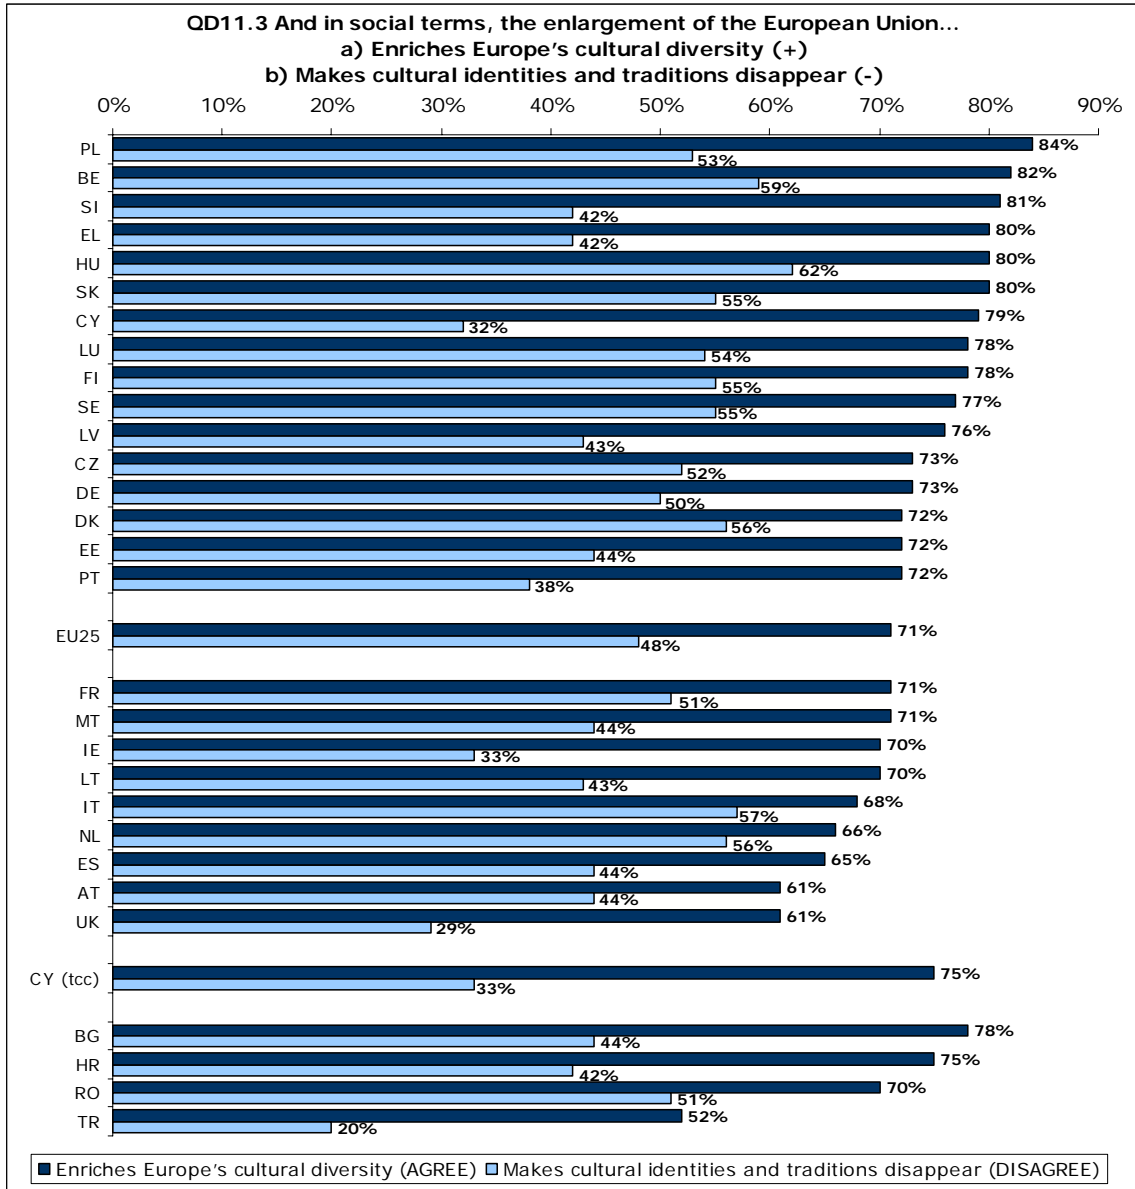

Even though there is hardly any dissent about the cultural enrichment of Europe through enlargement, the majority of British 56% and Irish 57%, Greek 57% and Cypriot 50% as well as Turkish 51% and Turkish Cypriot 54% respondents worry about the disappearance of their cultural identities and traditions. In contrast, 62%

³⁰ QD11.3 And in social terms, the enlargement of the European Union...

a. Enriches Europe's cultural diversity.

b. Makes cultural identities and traditions disappear.

of Hungarians do not share this fear, and do not expect the disappearance of their cultural identity or traditions because of enlargement.

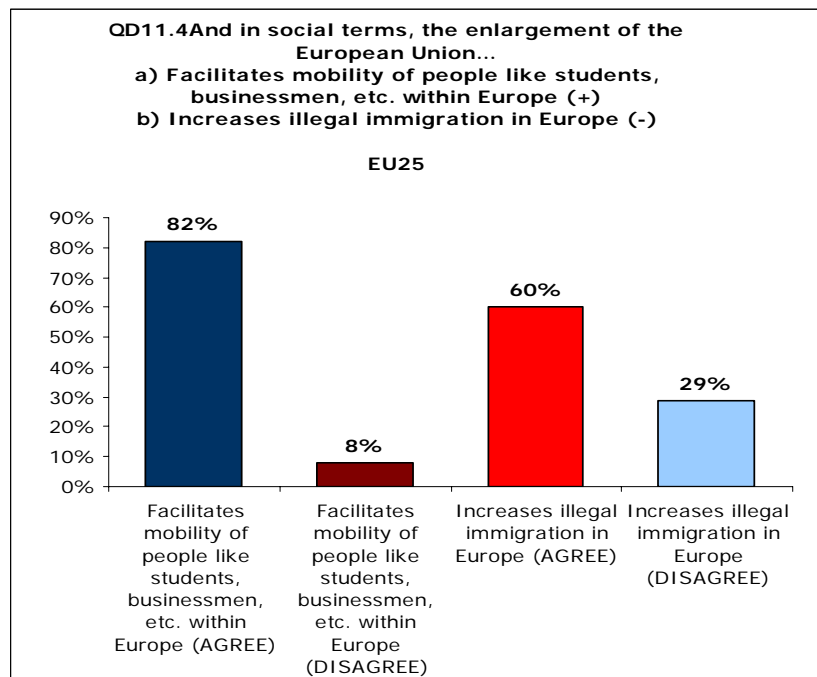

Mobility

Questionnaire source: QD11.4³¹

The following two statements are not totally comparable; one of them concerns mobility mainly from an "internal" point of view (+), meanwhile the other one concerns immigration also from outside the EU (-).

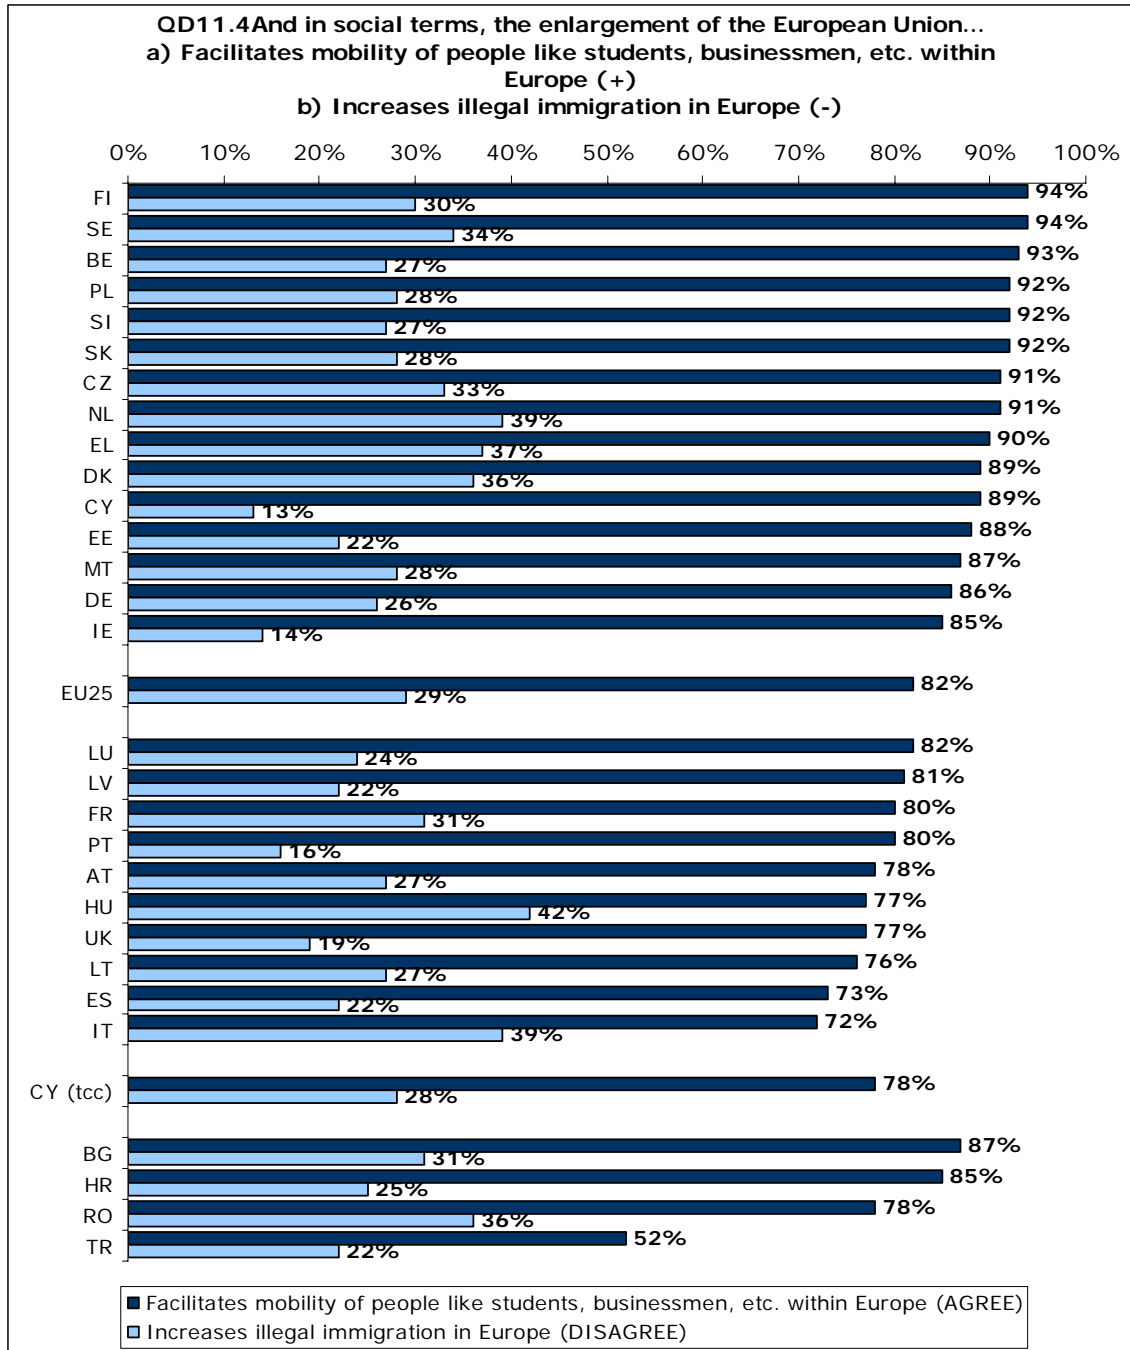

An overwhelming majority of the EU population (82%) recognise the positive value of mobility that is provided by the European Union. However, 60% of EU citizens have concerns about the increase of illegal immigration in Europe. The 22 percentage points difference between the two figures in favour of recognition of the advantages of European mobility compared to the increase of illegal immigration must be noticed.

In all countries, a clear support has been given for the positive effects of mobility. On the other hand, both old (60%) and new (58%) member states' citizens are afraid of an increase in illegal immigration through EU enlargement. However, except Cyprus (72%), the EU15 countries stand at the very top of the country scale in this respect. Several EU15 states are more affected by (illegal) immigration because immigrants hope to attain a better life in a shorter period of time in these countries.

³¹ QD11.4 And in social terms, the enlargement of the European Union...

a. Facilitates mobility of people like students, businessmen, etc. within Europe.
b. Increases illegal immigration in Europe.

An increase in illegal immigration as a consequence of enlargement makes people with “right-wing” political views more anxious (66%), than people on the “left” (54%).

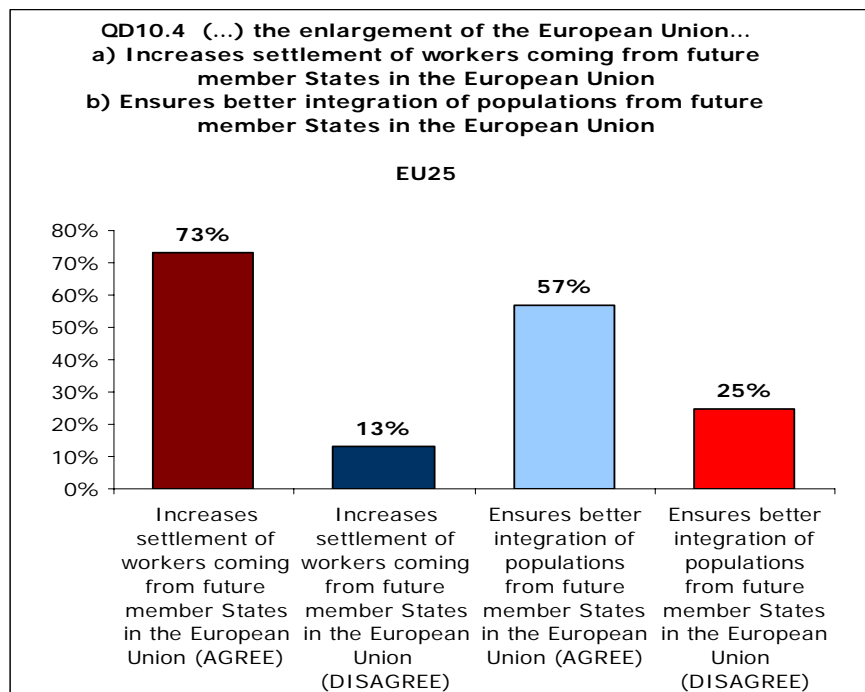

Further, 71% of respondents who oppose enlargement in general fear the increase of illegal immigration, while enlargement supporters (54%) are less afraid of this phenomenon.

Questionnaire source: QD10.4³²

The potential migration flow of populations from future member states is a peculiar aspect of European mobility; an even more specialised issue is workers' mobility from these countries. The two statements of the questionnaire are therefore not contradictory and not entirely comparable; moreover they can not be regarded as evidently positive or negative aspects of European mobility issues.

Almost three quarters of Europeans polled (73%) think that enlargement increases the settlement of workers from future member states in the EU. On the other hand, 57% of respondents agree that enlargement ensures better integration of populations from these countries in the European Union.

This integration definitely cannot be reduced to workers alone, but should imply the political, legal, economic and social integration of the whole population of a future member state from the time of accession. Experience of previous enlargements may ease future such processes.³³

At the country level, trends regarding the increase of settlement of workers from future member states, are the same as for the previous question on illegal immigration: Old and new member states' citizens consider equally (73%) that enlargement increases the settlement of workers from future member states in the EU. However, apart from Cyprus (83%), EU15 countries stand at the very top of the country scale in this respect.

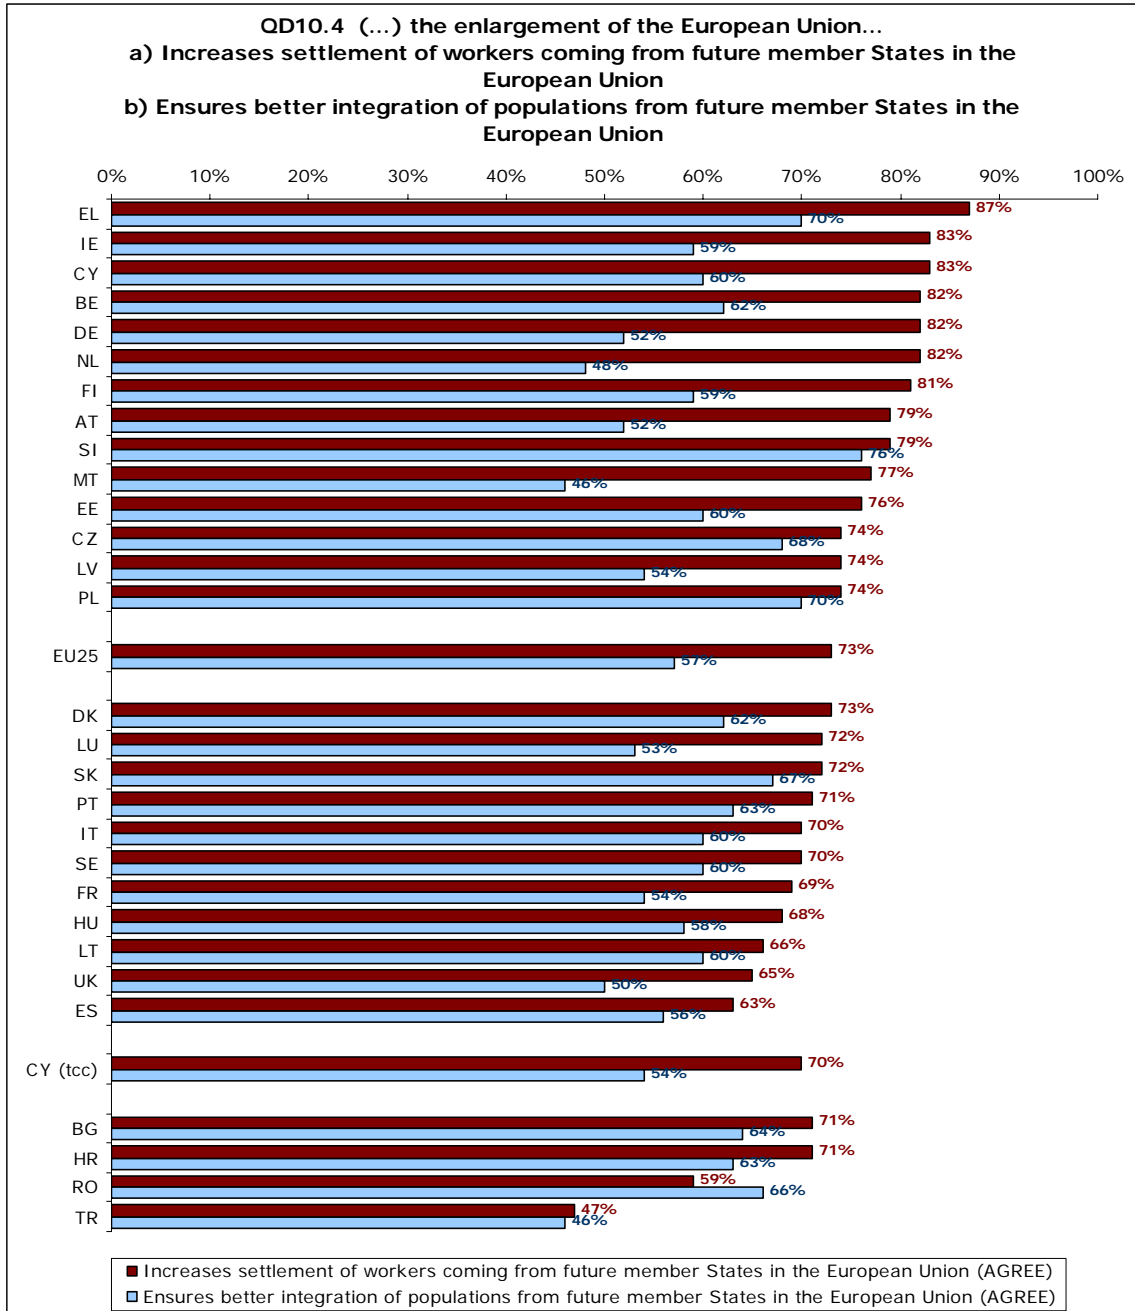

³² QD10.4 And in economic terms, the enlargement of the European Union...

a. Increases settlement of workers coming from future member States in the European Union.

b. Ensures better integration of populations from future member States in the European Union.

³³ Chapter 2.3 deals with the impact of the recent enlargement with regard to migration flow.

Concerning the integration of populations from future member states in the EU, the tendencies comply with the ones observed at the analysis of the general and the political aspects of enlargement. Countries where public opinion supports enlargement in general (Slovenia – 76%, Greece – 70% and Poland – 70%) think the most that enlargement ensures better integration of populations of future member states, meanwhile those where there are more enlargement opponents hold the opposite view (the Netherlands - 40% and Germany - 38%).

All the different socio-demographic groups think that enlargement increases the settlement of workers from future EU member states in the Union, and the previously observed trends cannot therefore be noted.

2.3. Perception of the last enlargement (1st May 2004)

- EU citizens do not know much about trade issues but perceive migration flows as important -

Two years after the largest enlargement in the European Union's history it is reasonable to review citizens' perception on topics which usually divide them in this context, namely economic benefits and migration.

Apparently there are some differences between the perception of respondents regarding the trade and migration aspects of enlargement and the reality.

A recent study³⁴ analysing the impact of the 2004 enlargement points out that the total value of exports by the EU15 to the new member states is much higher than its imports from these countries. Thus the old member states have taken advantage of the enlargement. "The new member states are the most important trade partner of the old Member States: about 70% of extra EU-10 imports of good in 2005 come from the old MS, with Germany being the top exporter. These exports helped to maintain and create jobs. [... since accession] the trade surplus with the new MS remained substantial."

The same study concluded the migration consequences of the most recent enlargement as follows: "the potential threats that have dominated emotively recent enlargement debates are overplayed; they are not supported by evidence nor is the potential for large migratory flows from the new Member States to the EU-15 is consistent, on the basis of recent trends, with rational reasoning." [...] Migratory flows have in general been small and there have been no substantial disruptions of national labour market. [...] the 2004 enlargement, with its derogations, has had no negative impact of EU-15 labour markets and as incomes and job opportunities in the EU-10 improve the risks for large migratory flows towards the EU-15 is diminishing.³⁵

http://ec.europa.eu/economy_finance/publications/occasional_papers/2006/ocp24en.pdf

"The EU-10 countries are very open economies with trade (exports plus imports) representing an average of 93% of GDP compared with an EU-15 average of 55%. The EU-15 share in total EU-10 trade has risen from about 56% in 1993 to 62% in 2005. The EU-10 market share in EU-15 imports has also increased by 8 percentage points to about 13% over the period 1993-2005 (excluding intra-EU-15 trade) with the Czech Republic and Poland (with market share of about 3.5%, each) being the largest exporters. [...] While the market gains of the EU-10 have been significant, reflecting competitive labour cost conditions, the EU-15 continue to run a substantial trade surplus with the new Member States."

³⁵ "In 2005, the highest shares of non-nationals in the working age population (about 1%) are in Austria and Germany, of which 1.5% and 0.6% respectively, come from EU-10 (Note that about 7% are non-EU nationals). The largest EU-10 stock of about 2% is in Ireland where non-nationals make up 8% of the working age population. Those Member without restrictions from EU-10 workers States (e.g. Ireland and the United Kingdom) had a better employment performance."

Questionnaire source: QD7a³⁶

Four out of ten Europeans polled (41%) seem in no position to estimate the trade consequences of the last enlargement. To the question comparing the value of exports of old member states to new ones, with the value of imports to the EU15 from the 10 new member states; 27% answered that the value of the EU15's export is bigger, while 18% hold the opposite view and finally 15% assessed the two as equal.

As we have seen previously in this chapter respondents are indeed not aware of the real trade effects of enlargement.

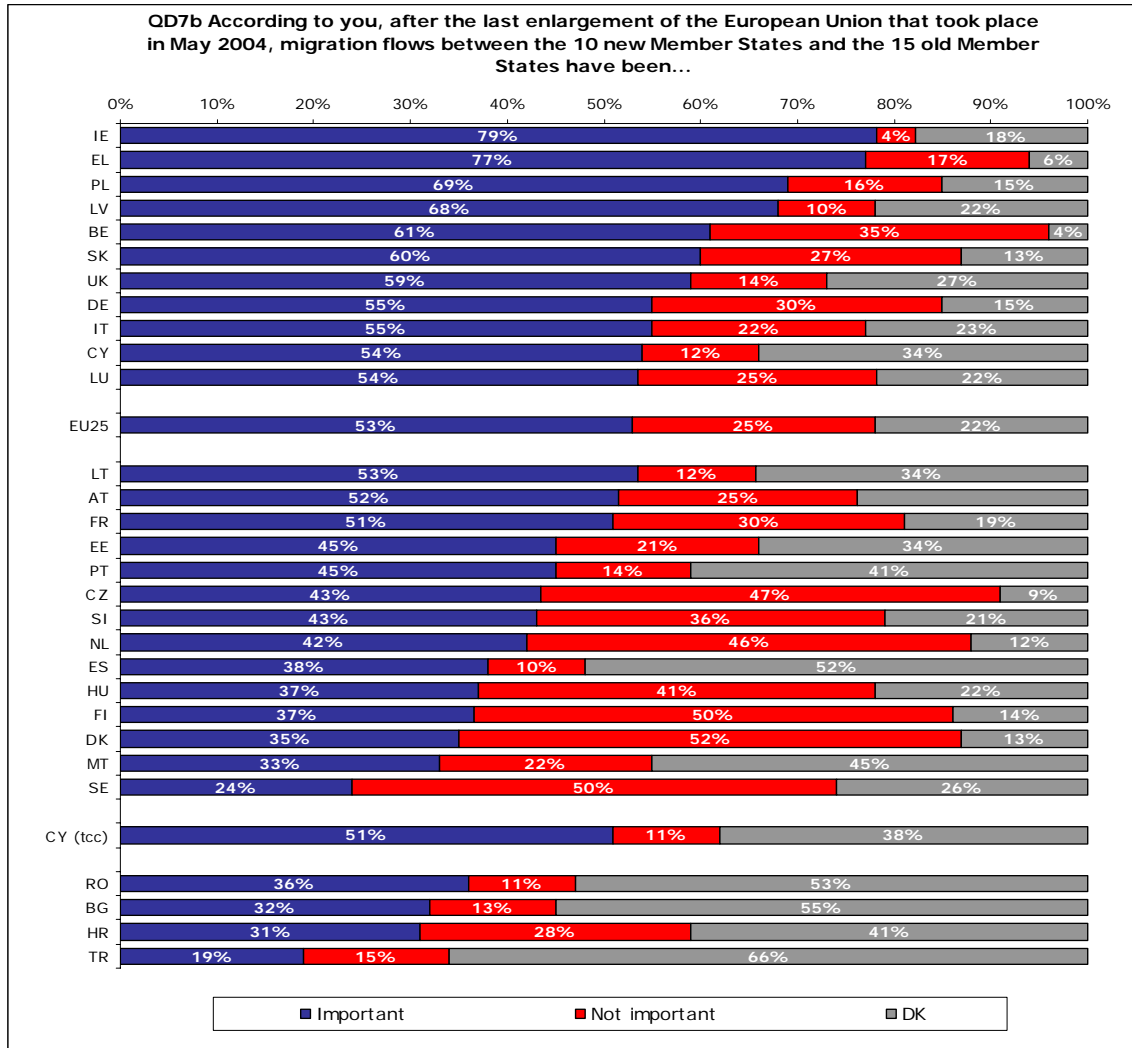

When analysing country results, no striking differences between the country variables can be observed, except for a higher proportion of "DK" replies from citizens of the already perceived countries (Spain 71%, Malta 65%, Portugal 63%, Cyprus 60%, Bulgaria 73%, Turkey 69% and Romania 67%).

Socio-demographic variables correspond to the trends emerged for question QD1 since knowledge of trade aspects of the enlargement implies some knowledge of enlargement in general. Compared to an average EU citizen (27%), men (32%), highly educated respondents (37%) and managers (39%) have estimated the volume of EU15's export to the new member states to be bigger. The majority of people who finished full time education at the age of 15 (53%) and house persons (54%) replied "don't know" to this question.

³⁶ QD7a According to you, would you say that during recent years, the value of exports of the 15 old European Union Member States to the 10 new Member States that joined the European Union in May 2004 has been bigger, smaller or equal to the value of their imports coming from these new Member States?

Questionnaire source: QD7b³⁷

The majority of the EU25 population (53%) have perceived migration flows between the 10 new and the 15 old member states as important. One in four interviewees (25%) regarded it as not important, while 22% had no opinion on this issue.

Only a solid, 6 percentage points' difference can be observed between the perceptions of old (52% as important) and new (58% as important) member states' citizens regarding the significance of migration.

At the top of the country scale are member states to which (Ireland – 79% and Belgium – 61%) or from which (Poland - 69% and Latvia – 68%), EU citizens have probably migrated.

Compared to the EU25 average (25%), it is again men (27%), people finished their education at 20 or even later (33%) and managers (36%) who consider migration flows as least important. On the other hand there is no significant difference among socio-demographic groups when it comes to seeing migration as important.

3. Future EU enlargement

- Respecting human rights is seen to be the main challenge facing the possible new member states –

Questionnaire source: QD13³⁸

Apart from the two negotiating candidate countries - Croatia and Turkey -, all other Western Balkan countries aspire to membership of the European Union as well. According to the surveyed Europeans the main challenges facing all these countries, on their way to the EU, are respect for human and minority rights (43%), reconciliation/cooperation with neighbouring countries (31%) and democracy (30%).

³⁸ QD13 We understand the Western Balkan countries as Croatia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Serbia and Montenegro including Kosovo under UN administration. In your opinion, which are the main challenges facing the Western Balkan countries and Turkey on their road to the European Union?

Respect for human and minority rights would cause difficulties for aspiring countries especially according to French (62%), Luxembourgers (62%), Swedes (60%), Finns (59%), Greek Cypriots (59%) and Greeks (57%).

Greek Cypriots (52%), Greeks (50%), Swedes (48%) and Slovenes (47%) find reconciliation and cooperation with neighbouring countries challenging for the countries in question the most.

Another eye-catching observation is that, compared to the 30% for the EU25 average, 51% of Danes are concerned about democracy.

3.1. Prospect of enlargement with respect to Western Balkan countries

- A relative majority of EU citizens sees the possible Western Balkan enlargement as primarily in the interest of the countries of this region -

Questionnaire source: QD14³⁹

A relative majority of the EU25 population (45%) consider the accession of the Western Balkan countries as primarily in the interest of the aspirants themselves. Almost one quarter of respondents (23%) however, regard these possible accessions to be of mutual interest to both the EU and these countries.

Compared to the EU average (9%), acceding (Bulgaria 18%, Romania 20%) and candidate countries' (Croatia 25%, Turkey 20%) citizens are more of the opinion that Western Balkan enlargement would be primarily in the interest of the European Union.

People from member states where public opinion is rather against enlargement (Finland 68%, Belgium 58%, Germany 57% and Luxembourg 57%) tend to consider that Western Balkan accessions would rather be in the interest of these countries. By contrast, countries that favour enlargement in general (Sweden 38%, Slovenia 37%, Croatia 36% and Denmark 35%) also tend a bit more to see the Western Balkan enlargement as of mutual interest to both parties.

membership for Western Balkan countries as of mutual interest, than their counterparts within the same groups.

Questionnaire source: QD16⁴¹

Regarding the public opinion of the European Union on the membership of each Western Balkan country, we have to emphasise the dynamic character of the question: The current questionnaire contains no timeline for the accession of these countries, but points out the necessity of complying with all the conditions set by the EU as a premise of membership. It is very likely that the fact of mentioning a timeline in a question would affect citizens' perception about the accession of new countries to the European Union.

Probably due to these features of the question, an increase (8 percentage points on average) of support for the membership can be observed in case of all aspirant countries when comparing the results with the Standard Eurobarometer figures of Autumn 2005.⁴²

We also have to keep in mind, firstly that section 1 has shown EU citizens feel in general they know little about the enlargement process and secondly that perceptions of citizens are likely to change – either in a positive or a negative way –, as aspirant countries make progress in meeting conditions as they get nearer to accession.

⁴² Standard Eurobarometer 64 (Autumn 2005): QA44. For each of the following countries, would you be in favour or against it becoming part of the European Union in the future?

According to the results of the present survey, only Croatia (56%; Standard 64: 51%) would enjoy the support of the majority of the EU25 population for its accession once the country complies with all the conditions set by the EU. A relative majority of Europeans polled is also in favour of the accession of the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (49%; Standard 64: 41%), Bosnia and Herzegovina (48%; Standard 64: 40%) and Serbia and Montenegro⁴³ (47%; Standard 64: 39%), provided they comply with all conditions set by the EU. These results correspond to the support for enlargement in general. However, EU citizens are much more divided about the possible accession of Albania: a relative majority (44%; Standard 64: in favour 33% and against 50%) is opposed to its accession to the EU even if it complies with all requirements set by the EU.

Country by country results reflect the same tendencies we have seen for the general enlargement support issue. For the detailed country figures please see table below.

Socio-demographic trends comply with the ones for question QD30.4 about the general support of EU enlargement. With respect to the possible accession of concrete countries, age seems to be a less determining factor than it is in general terms. However, it can be concluded that elderly (respondents at least 55 years old) are definitely more against enlargement of any kind.

3.2. Prospect of enlargement with respect to Turkey

-A majority of EU citizens sees Turkey's membership of the EU as primarily in Turkey's interest -

Questionnaire source: QD15⁴⁴

The majority of Europeans interviewed (52%) see the accession of Turkey as mainly in the interest of the country itself. 20% would see a mutual interest to both the EU and Turkey for its entry in the European Union.

Trends are similar to the ones at QD14: In comparison to the EU average (7%), acceding (Bulgaria 12%, Romania 18%) and negotiating candidate countries' (Croatia 15%, and Turkey 34%) citizens tend to emphasise primarily the interest of the European Union. In fact, more Turks think that their membership of the EU would be primarily in the interest of the Union than of mutual interest to both (30%).

Only 13% of Turkish citizens consider their country to have the most interest on possible accession. This result is in line with the general attitudes of the Turkish citizens about the enlargement perceived throughout this report: they appear not to be convinced that their country's membership would be beneficial for them.

People from countries where public opinion is in general less in favour of enlargement (Finland 73%, Belgium 66%, Germany 68% and Luxembourg 62%), ⁴⁴ QD15 According to you, European Union accession of Turkey would be...?

rather underline the interest of Turkey primarily in its accession to the EU. Meanwhile, respondents from countries where public opinion is relatively more enlargement friendly (Sweden 35%, the Netherlands 31% and Denmark 29%) tend a bit more to regard Turkey's accession as of mutual interest to both parties.

31% of Turkish Cypriots see the accession of Turkey as a "win - win situation", 26% consider it would serve primarily the interest of their own community and 24% think it would be in the interest of the EU.

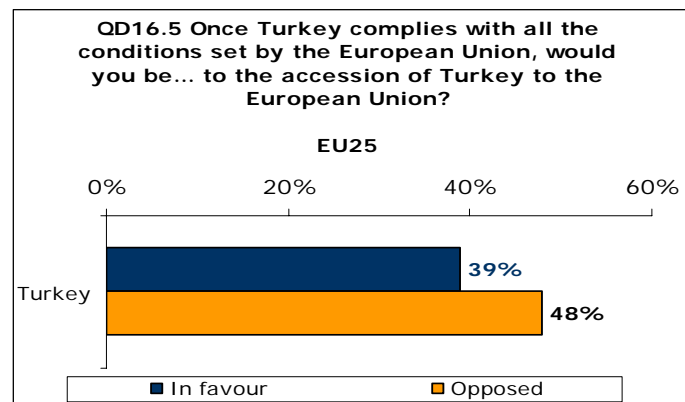

The socio-demographic figures are also consistent with the ones for QD14.

Questionnaire source: QD16⁴⁵

Once again we have to underline the dynamic character of the question and the further aspects discussed previously at the Western Balkan countries.

As the current question foresees no timeline for the accession of Turkey, but as a premise of the membership emphasises the requirement of complying with all the conditions set by the EU, an increase (8 percentage points) of support for the membership can be observed compared to the result at the Standard Eurobarometer 64 of Autumn 2005.⁴⁶

According to the present public opinion in the European Union, of all the candidate and potential candidate countries, Turkey's accession generates the most disapproval. 48% (Standard 64: 55%) is opposed; while 39% (Standard 64: 31%) is in favour of its entry to the EU even if it complies with all conditions set by the EU.

The country results correspond to the general and Western Balkan enlargement trends: respondents in countries that are in favour of enlargement in general also support Turkey's accession while citizens in countries that oppose enlargement would reject its membership.

The Turkish Cypriot Community (67%) is most in favour of Turkey's joining the EU, even more than Turkey itself (54%). The strongest opposition of the accession of Turkey can be observed in Austria (81%), Germany (69%) and in Luxemburg (69%). Cyprus (68%) and Greece (67%) are also fairly against Turkey's membership in the European Union, even though they support the accession of countries in general.

3.3. Means to ensure the success of future enlargement

- A clear political project is considered most important for the success of future EU enlargements -

Questionnaire source: QD12⁴⁷

The EU25 population consider that a clear political project (37%), a better knowledge and understanding between people in the EU and the (potential) candidate countries (34%), as well as a public awareness of the benefits and challenges of EU enlargement (32%) are the most important means to ensure the success of future enlargements.

⁴⁷ QD12 In your opinion, amongst the following, what would be the most important things in order to make any further enlargements of the European Union successful? (MAX. 3 ANSWERS)

It is particularly the Danes (52%), Dutch (50%), French (47%), Slovenians (47%) and Swedes (46%) who attach importance to the existence of a clear political project for Europe.

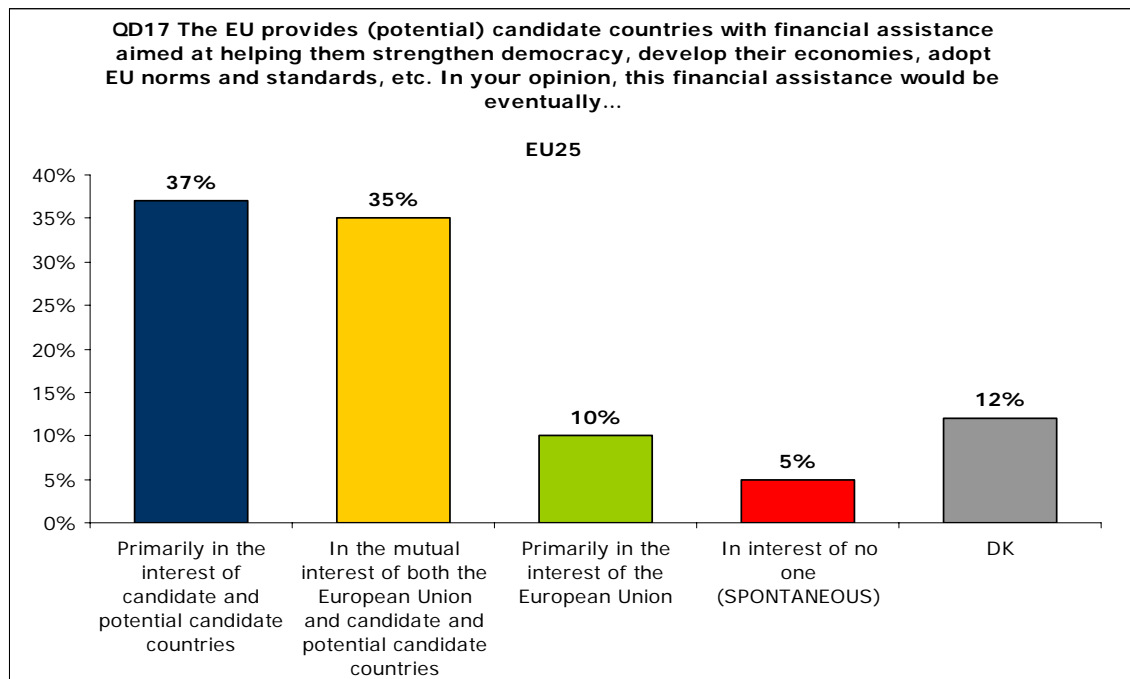

The majority of Swedes (54%) and Finns (50%) regard a better knowledge and understanding between people in the EU and in the candidate and potential candidate countries as the key to the success of future enlargements.

Public awareness of the benefits and challenges of EU enlargement is considered significant in regard to success by Greeks (52%), Finns (50%) and Swedes (45%).

When analysing socio-demographic trends, we can observe that people with a higher educational and socio-economic status tend to lay more emphasis on the importance of a clear political project for Europe, and an awareness of the benefits and challenges of EU enlargement.

Questionnaire source: QD17⁴⁸

37% of EU citizens think that the financial assistance the EU provides candidate and potential candidate countries is primarily in the interest of these countries themselves. Probably due to the list of supportable projects (e.g. strengthening democracy, developing economy, adopting EU norms and standards), 35% recognise the mutual benefits of such financial aid.

⁴⁸ QD17 As you may know, the European Union provides candidate and potential candidate countries with financial assistance aimed at helping them strengthen democracy, respect for human and minority rights, fight organized crime and corruption, develop their economies and adopt European Union norms and standards. In your opinion, this financial assistance would be eventually...

CONCLUSION

European Union citizens are not well informed about enlargement: two thirds (68%) do not feel they are well informed about enlargement of the European Union. It should therefore be borne in mind that their opinion on enlargement is formed on the basis of this limited knowledge. Nevertheless, a relative majority of the EU population is generally in favour of enlargement, although we observe significant differences between countries where public opinion is in favour of enlargement in general, for instance Greece, Spain or Denmark and those who are less so, such as Germany, Luxembourg and France.

Overall, the principal ideas and political benefits of EU enlargement are widely recognised, however its economic and social consequences seem to divide public opinion in the EU.

We observe that the EU25 public opinion on enlargement is somewhat inconsistent when it comes to perceptions on the advantages and disadvantages of EU enlargement. The same issue was put to respondents using both a positive and negative formulation and the results show that a certain proportion of respondents give contradictory responses i.e. agree when the notion is put in a positive manner yet also agree when this notion is phrased negatively. This impact of the wording of questions on European public opinion on enlargement may perhaps reflect a lack of knowledge among EU citizens on this issue: People who are less interested in or less informed about a topic could be more likely to agree with a concept that is presented in a positive way.

Regarding the opinion on enlargement for certain domains, we can see that most Europeans surveyed recognise that EU enlargement will have positive consequences on mobility for Europe, the enrichment of cultural diversity, peace and stability, democracy, as well as the reinforcement of the EU's role on the international scene.

In contrast, with regard to the economic and social consequences of the process, EU citizens worry most about employment. They fear an increase in labour transfer to countries where labour is cheaper, as well as expecting workers from future member states of the Union to settle in other EU countries.

European Union citizens do not perceive enlargement as a win-win situation; while they consider that the 2004 enlargement process benefits the new member states, they are more concerned about the problems that could arise. Furthermore they consider future accessions as primarily in the interest of the candidate and potential countries and fear the consequences for the economic situation of their own country. All in all they seem to have insufficient information about, and are less aware of, the benefits for citizens of the old member states and the collective good thereof. This also holds true for future enlargement processes; apart from the low level of knowledge about the topic in general, benefits for the EU are less known compared to benefits for potential future member states.

In respect of further enlargement, Croatia enjoys the support of the majority of the EU population; a relative majority is also in favour of the accession of the other Western Balkan countries, except for Albania, as well as Turkey the last of which is least supported. In fact, a significant proportion of Europeans polled (from 30% for Croatia, to 48% for Turkey) are opposed to the accession of these countries.

To ensure the success of future enlargement, EU citizens first and foremost emphasise the need for a clear political project for Europe. Furthermore they underline the importance of information and knowledge about enlargement, obtained both through personal experience (a better knowledge and understanding between peoples in the EU and in the potential candidate and candidate countries) as well as through promoting public awareness of the benefits and challenges of EU enlargement.

It is quite clear that information and communication play a crucial role here on the EU25 citizens' perceptions of enlargement.

We noted that citizens who feel they are well informed are more in favour of enlargement than those who do not, probably because they are more interested in enlargement, and also more aware of the general benefits of this process.

To sum up, EU citizens call for more information and communication about EU enlargement in order to better assess the benefits and challenges of this process, in the context of a clear political project for Europe. The results of this survey also point out that people living in the European Union primarily expect national governments and the media to provide them with such information.

Certainly in case of a complex process like the enlargement of the European Union, there are numerous parameters which shape citizens' attitudes towards this issue. This survey has shown that lack of information is a factor strongly perceived by EU citizens and it affects their attitudes towards future enlargement.

EUROBAROMETER SPECIAL N° 255 “Enlargement of the European Union” TECHNICAL SPECIFICATIONS

Between the 27th of March and the 1st of May 2006, TNS Opinion & Social, a consortium created between Taylor Nelson Sofres and EOS Gallup Europe, carried out wave 65.2 of the EUROBAROMETER, on request of the EUROPEAN COMMISSION, Directorate-General Press and Communication, Opinion Polls.

The SPECIAL EUROBAROMETER N° 255 is part of the wave 65.2 and covers the population of the respective nationalities of the European Union Member States, resident in each of the Member States and aged 15 years and over. The SPECIAL EUROBAROMETER N° 255 has also been conducted in the two acceding countries (Bulgaria and Romania) and in the two candidate countries (Croatia and Turkey) and in the Turkish Cypriot Community. In these countries, the survey covers the national population of citizens of the respective nationalities and the population of citizens of all the European Union Member States that are residents in those countries and have a sufficient command of one of the respective national language(s) to answer the questionnaire. The basic sample design applied in all states is a multi-stage, random (probability) one. In each country, a number of sampling points was drawn with probability proportional to population size (for a total coverage of the country) and to population density.

In order to do so, the sampling points were drawn systematically from each of the "administrative regional units", after stratification by individual unit and type of area. They thus represent the whole territory of the countries surveyed according to the EUROSTAT NUTS II (or equivalent) and according to the distribution of the resident population of the respective nationalities in terms of metropolitan, urban and rural areas. In each of the selected sampling points, a starting address was drawn, at random. Further addresses (every Nth address) were selected by standard "random route" procedures, from the initial address. In each household, the respondent was drawn, at random (following the "closest birthday rule"). All interviews were conducted face-to-face in people's homes and in the appropriate national language. As far as the data capture is concerned, CAPI (Computer Assisted Personal Interview) was used in those countries where this technique was available.

For each country a comparison between the sample and the universe was carried out. The Universe description was derived from Eurostat population data or from national statistics offices. For all countries surveyed, a national weighting procedure, using marginal and intercellular weighting, was carried out based on this Universe description. In all countries, gender, age, region and size of locality were introduced in the iteration procedure. For international weighting (i.e. EU averages), TNS Opinion & Social applies the official population figures as provided by EUROSTAT or national statistic offices. The total population figures for input in this post-weighting procedure are listed above.

Readers are reminded that survey results are estimations, the accuracy of which, everything being equal, rests upon the sample size and upon the observed percentage. With samples of about 1,000 interviews, the real percentages vary within the following confidence limits:

Observed percentages	10% or 90%	20% or 80%	30% or 70%	40% or 60%	50%
Confidence limits	± 1.9 points	± 2.5 points	± 2.7 points	± 3.0 points	± 3.1 points
